THE

BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

The Offices of the "Broad Arrow" are removed from 2, Waterloo Place, to

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 16, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, May 26th; Madras and Allahabad, May 24th; Calcutta, May 24th.

DEFEAT, by a small majority, on a matter, comparatively speaking, of detail, has been made, by Mr. Gladstone's Government, a reason for proffering to Her Majesty, and for adhering to, the resignation of their offices; they have distinctly declined, through the mouth of their chief, to exercise the forbearance usual towards an incoming Ministry; in a word, they have acted like themselves. This was to be expected from persons who, whatever they may be individually, have never, collectively, acted as gentlemen.

THE formation of a Government, undertaken by Lord Salisbury, will not, certainly, be facilitated by an émeute of his followers and would-be colleagues, in the Commons, last evening, the details of which our readers will find in any daily paper.

WE have not been sparing of our strictures on the "policy" of the present—or late—Cabinet so far as the interests of India are concerned; and should cordially hail the pursuance, no matter by what Government, of a really manly and consistent course of procedure.

THE ostentatious indifferentism of foreign journals regarding what may be, to us, a most important event, is, alas! but one among innumerable signs how England has, under the present Government, been allowed to "lapse" from her position as a first-rate European Power. "Neither regret nor exultation is, as a rule, expressed here (Paris) at the change of Government in England." The "political correspondence" of Vienna, well known by every student of German political newspapers to be more than semi-official, publishes a letter supposed to emanate from St. Petersburg. What does the Divine Figure from the North say? "The foreign policy of the late Cabinet certainly justifies the general discontent felt by the English people; but the world would be deceived if it supposed that Mr. Gladstone's fall caused any general regret in Russia. . . . Everbody in Russia recognises that the combination now in hand is fragile and must be short-lived." We know Mr. Gladstone's love for Russia. Where is Russia's affection for Mr. Gladstone? Where is the "solemn" and "sacred" covenant? Mr. Gladstone has renounced the honour of the country in favour of a one-sided affection for Russia, and, when the fulfilment of the loving vows is claimed, finds that he is jilted. It might be amusing to us in any other nation; it is deplorable where our own dear country is concerned, that the fortunes of an Empire, as great, perhaps, as any the world has seen, should be shattered in five years by a plausibly chattering "idéologue." The Novoe Vremya, also quasi-official, favours us with a very broad hint, that the change of Ministry "will be the signal for the commencement of an active policy in Central Asia and the Balkan Peninsula." . . . It behoves the Russian Government to be more exacting. Fate has, indeed, been hard on any possible Conservative Government.

WE are always glad to see in Native papers such a paragraph as follows:—

The Rast Goftar says that a movement has been set on foot by the Indian residents of London with a view to acknowledging the services of Sir James Fergusson, late Governor of Bombay, in having promoted good feeling and intercourse between the European and native communities of this presidency during his gubernatorial career.

Though Sir J. Fergusson may have been somewhat crotchety, he has always shown himself thoroughly conscientious; and, though we heartily dislike testimonials, we quite appreciate the feeling which, in the present case, has given rise to the movement.

"THE Native Press," observes the Bombay Gazette, "is very pronounced in its opinion on the Russo-Afghan question."

The Jam-i-Jamshed says:—If the news wired by the correspondent of the Bombay Gazette anent the sudden change in the political aspect be confirmed, we can only say that even the present timid Ministry will have to resort to war. The Russian promises are blown away to the winds. That perfidious nation wish to take all possible advantage of our timidity. All negotiations with Russia should at once be cut off. The British should take possession of Herat without any delay. Once Herat is out of our hands, the Afghans will change sides. In spite of everything and anything we do for the Afghans, they will never be our friends. To manoeuvre for peace, therefore, is mere waste of time.

The Gujerati says:—The Bombay Gazette's telegram creates fresh alarm of war. We are unable to ascertain the precise views of the Czar, and the milk-and-water policy of the British Cabinet is equally uncertain. Meanwhile we have incurred the preparatory expenditure of eleven crores. Who shall say what the amount will be if war be actually declared?

WE take the following from the Morning Post of Saturday. It comes opportunely to emphasise what we have been urging on this subject. The present block seems to have been purely accidental. But think of such an accident in war time! And what of "accidents done on purpose," as children say!

CAIRO, June 12.

The block in the Suez Canal has been caused by a large iron dredger which drifted away from her moorings during the prevalence of heavy squally weather, and while drifting in this way was blown so as to slew across the bows of the English collier Thomas Melville. The dredger sank from the effect of the collision.

It is estimated that at least fifteen days must elapse before large steamers can again pass through the canal, as it will be necessary to make a passage completely round the sunken dredger.

Although this prolonged delay will be productive of serious temporary inconvenience, there will at least be one good result to be derived from this, as it must open the eyes of the English nation to the ease with which the canal can be rendered impassable, an important matter in the event of a war.

Suez will speedily have her port filled with shipping, as a single day's block collects crowds of vessels at each end.

A telegram to Lloyd's, dated Port Said, May 12, 11.30 A.M., states that it has been decided to dredge the channel and also to blow up the sunken dredger, and adds that both operations have been commenced.

WE must look out for squalls in Eastern Africa. All Mr. Gladstone's kotowing—and nothing could have been more abject—all Lord Rosebery's persuasiveness, have not appeased Bismarck. A German claims to have got, by cession or purchase, something or other from a feudatory of Zanzibar. The feudatory, let us say, of some place with an unpronounceable name, sells "rights" which neither he nor anyone else can define, it being known that he holds them from his lord or suzerain. Now he cannot give, sell, or alienate what is not his. What is his? What may be his, and what he may profess to sell to an European purchaser, are two vastly different things, and may, alas! lead to "differences of opinion," not only between individuals, but between States as representing their subjects. Between reasonable Governments such matters are usually easily adjusted, and, had we a reasonable Government, there would probably have been little difficulty. But, as in Fiji, so here, we seem to have made a bungle of it. The mere printing of the Blue-books on German claims in Fiji would have gone far towards paying them in full. The German "arbitrator" seems to have been a reasonable man enough, and no real difficulty was ever raised; it was as simple a matter as well can be. But the Foreign Office, under its present incapable head, exists, not to settle difficulties, but to write despatches creating them. It did so admirably in the Fiji business; let us beware that it does not play us the same trick in so dangerous a quarter as Zanzibar. We will undertake to say that twenty minutes' talk—provided Earl Granville were not one of the interlocutors—would settle the whole affair, and that "everybody would be happy ever after."

WE insert two little straws from the Delhi Gazette, to show which way the wind blows—what the vacillation of the Government is bringing about. What is said in Calcutta may be magnified at least a hundredfold if we wish to reproduce to ourselves the form it will assume in the Mofussil. The Bank of Bengal will be supposed to represent the Kaiser-i-Hind, whose promises to pay are worthless because the Great White Tsar has eaten her up! Such, or something akin to it, will be the Bazaar "gup":—

A Calcutta correspondent writes that, during the recent excitement regarding the coming (although, as it would now seem, deferred) war between Great Britain and Russia, a strange rumour got abroad in the Calcutta bazaars to the effect that Government were becoming anxious regarding the security of the Bank of Bengal, and that measures were actually being taken by the authorities for the removal of all treasure in the bank vaults to Fort William. This rumour was widespread in native commercial circles in Calcutta last week, and was not wholly disbelieved by a number of credulous and timid individuals of an obvious nationality.

The Bangalore merchants having positively declined to accept Government currency notes in lieu of rupees, the Resident's Treasury had to despatch currency notes to the value of two lakhs of rupees to Madras, to have them exchanged into current coin.

A CORRESPONDENT, "Spectator," of the Statist, reminding us that the Indian tea industry represents a capitalised value of £10,000,000 sterling, and a cultivated area of from 200,000 to 250,000 acres of planting, producing roughly nearly seventy million pounds of tea, suggests that the combination of the highest efficiency in management with the utmost economy in expenditure may best be secured by intercommunication among planters as to results attained. He at the same time remarks that, unless accounts be kept on something like an uniform system, comparisons are (not only "odorous," but) impossible. The fact only requires to be stated in order that its truth should be recognised; and as "Spectator" promises to suggest, in a future letter, appropriate forms, we think his communication well worthy the attention of our tea-planting readers.

CAN any of our readers remember the confusion worse confounded of the old break of gauge at Gloucester? What will they say to a break of gauge in a line on which an entire British army may ere long depend for its supplies? Yet the Civil and Military Gazette understands that, although the broad gauge railway from Rindli will only be laid down for forty miles, as far as the mouth of the Bolan Pass, it is intended to construct a narrow gauge line of two feet six inches from this terminus on to Quetta. Without such an arrangement, nearly the whole of the present establishment of baggage animals and drivers would have to be maintained, and the delay and cost in forwarding supplies would still be so great as to be fatal to the maintenance of a large force in Peshin. Are our rulers "gone clean daft?"

SHOULD our Government imitate the German army in the introduction of "cycles," as they do, longo intervallo, in other things, taking them up as the Germans discard them, our Volunteers could find them a corps of unequalled "cyclists." These might, in certain circumstances, be used, detached from the main body, as éclaireurs; but to have half-a-dozen regiments of mounted infantry, whose horses need no feeding, is something after all; nor is Moltke likely to have adopted the idea were it a bad one. Cannot we utilise it in India? Plenty of level ground, at all events! "A regiment of bicycles," says the American Register, "is the latest innovation in the German army. The Munich garrison are now busily practising cycling, as the bicycle is to be officially introduced among the Bavarian regiments, and its use is being first tested by orderly service."

WE do not at all vouch for the truth of the subjoined, but it is by no means an improbable story. Prince Bismarck must have been very ill-understood by Mr. Gladstone—who is said abroad never to have "appreciated" any one but himself—if he was not credited with a spice of what the French call "malice," alias just a wee bit of vindictiveness. The idea of threatening M. de Freycinet with having, in case he were too exacting, to make his own terms with Lord Salisbury, is, to any one who has studied M. de Freycinet's political history, too rich; it is worthy—well, of Earl Granville:—

The Exchange Telegraph Company's correspondent at Berlin is responsible for the following:—"What purports to be the secret history of the downfall of the Gladstone Cabinet is being circulated among diplomatists here. It is said that Lord Rosebery came to Berlin to learn the terms of reconciliation with Prince Bismarck, while Mr. Chamberlain was sent to Paris to get an estimate of the cost of an Anglo-French alliance, with the alternative to M. de Freycinet of having to deal with Lord Salisbury, if his demands were too extravagant. Lord Rosebery learned that reconciliation with Mr. Gladstone was out of the range of possibility; while Mr. Chamberlain found that nothing short of equal shares in Egypt would be acceptable. When their colleagues returned the British Cabinet had only to arrange for their own defeat and for retirement."

RUSSIA, it is well known, keenly resents the competition of English traders in her possessions in Tartary. Central Asia is at present supplied with "green" tea from India, which, free of duty, is sent by way of Afghanistan and Herat, and the working of the whole commerce, complains the Moscow Gazette, is in the hands of the English. At present a Russian company is being organised at Tashkend, which is demanding the privilege of procuring green tea at a lower price by importing it by sea to Poti, and thence by the Trans-Caucasian Railway to Batumi across the Caspian Sea, and by river to the steppes. Procured in this way, the company calculates that it will be possible to provide the numerous tea traders with cheaper tea of the same quality as is at present sold in these parts, in order to save the people of the Khivan and Bokharan districts, as well as those in the surrounding steppes, from being overcharged by the Afghans and English, as at present the Russians declare to be the case.

Our obituary, recording the death of Robert von Schlagintweit, reminds us that the expenses attendant on his scientific mission were in great part defrayed by old John Company. We wonder what sum would be granted or a similar object under the present régime?

As might have been expected, the heat has had injurious effects on the crops in some parts; but, on the whole, the outlook seems encouraging. "Prospects," we read, "are somewhat critical in several districts of Madras and Mysore. It is expected that the wheat crop, the harvest of which is now nearly completed, will be a full average one in the North-West Provinces and the Punjab, and the final estimates of its quantity are considerably in excess of those published a month ago."

WE know that it is a regular practice of unscrupulous Frenchmen to marry one or more pretty English girls, carefully not observing the preposterous formalities as to parental assent required in France (and, for the matter of that, in Germany, too). We well remember a Lutheran clergyman of fifty who could not marry again because his mother, an obstinate old lady of seventy, "did not see it"). But we did not expect to find the counterpart of this grievance in India. Yet so it is. The Chinese who emigrate are not allowed to "export" a wife, so they take one in the place where they reside. But these unions, it would seem, are not regarded as marriages in China, nor, indeed, as valid in India; and this view of the case has been recently affirmed by Mr. Justice Scott, of the Bombay High Court, in a case in which a Mahomedan woman had, with her children, been deserted by her husband, and their father, a Chinaman. We regret to learn that these cases are common in Bombay, and advise the women there to "mind their P's and Q's;" a thing the more easily done, as a Chinaman is not (at all events, to European eyes) a very fascinating or attractive individual. At Calcutta the Chinese are stated to behave, on the whole, very fairly to their so-called spouses. The reason is not explained. Is it that the atmosphere of Bengal is especially conducive to honourable dealing?

Chit Chat.

MURRAH for the fair sex! The Dowager Maharani of Baroda has offered to raise a corps of Mahratta ladies, to serve as "a precedent to the ladies of India and England, and to show the prowess with which the race of females capable of bearing arms can fight side by side with the military forces of the empire." That the weaker sex can fight is abundantly proved by the events of the Saracenic wars.

THE death is announced of the grandson of Tippu Sultan, and descendant of one of the forty-four sons of that potentate. Fancy walking to church at the head of more than fourscore children!

IN the Central Provinces a certain Deputy-Commissioner met a torch-light procession entering a village at a time when the sun was high in the heavens. Not unnaturally he inquired the cause of so strange a proceeding. He was gravely informed that the natives considered more light was necessary to illuminate the darkness which enveloped the English authorities. At the present time the British Isles would stand in need of similar enlightenment.

AN Englishman's dinner is supposed to be the pièce de resistance of the day. This fact, so patent to the most ordinary intellect, did not pass unobserved in a certain district of Sambalpur, for an anxious cultivator, narrating the various and varied measures taken to secure a good sugar crop, wound up his oration by stating that "in fact, we have given it an Englishman's dinner!"

AT Trichinopoly the Bar and the Bench are at loggerheads as to which is the worst—a contusion or a fracture. Seven years' transportation for the former seems rather severe, but then it is only India, and does not matter.

How friendly natives put things? A small infant was being wheeled along the Mall at Calcutta, whereupon a passer-by stopped to inquire whose baby it was. The reply was delightful: "Please, sabib, it belongs to the firm of —," mentioning a well-known body of merchants. What was meant was that one of the partners was the happy parent.

BURMA may be commended as a place for men of a pious turn of mind. When the Governor of Bhamo heard of the approach of the rebels he immediately ordered all the boys in a missionary school to be strung up by the heels for two hours. But what had the small children done?

A WANDERER is now in India supposed to be an emissary of the Czar. But, if so, "holy Russia" has selected a "holy spy," for the worthy in question purports to be a priest of the Order of the Barnabites—but, then, perhaps, "the better the man the better the deed."

To paint a Buddhist temple yellow, as being the sacred colour of that religion, and then to be abused as a vandal for daubing the edifice has been the hard fate of Mr. Begler, of Gaza notoriety. It is hard to please everybody.

So the palace of the Ameer of Afghanistan at Cabul is to be illuminated with electric light, if, that is, his engineers can make the apparatus work. But will they succeed in this respect? In this, as in other matters, the Ameer disdains assistance from the "Faringh's."

THERE is nothing new under the sun. Even the discovery how to wear false teeth turns out to be as old as the time of the Etruscans, who used to attach animal teeth to the human bone with their gold plates.

It has been discovered that if flies are inhaled into the human body they are likely to breed there. Fancy an inside filled with buzzers!

The punishment amongst the Celestials for suicide is to flog the dead body. This desecration is said to have a powerful effect in stopping self-destruction.

WISEACRES tell us that prestige in the East goes for nought. Be it so. Then we must call things by some other name. Here is a case in point. In Ceylon there was a sudden scare, accompanied by a withdrawal to a large extent of funds from the savings bank, all due to Bazaar rumours that there were some Russian cruisers off the island. How about prestige?

The death at Surat of a holy man to whom the faithful were wont to entrust their savings has been followed by widespread ruin, as it appears that his estate was bankrupt to the tune of £70,000.

LOCAL self-government at Tanjore is in difficulties, there being two bodies so inimical to one another that whatever one proposes the other thwarts. Evidently these astute natives have taken a leaf from political parties in the enlightened land

"THOU com'st in such a questionable shape" might well be applied to the commendation bestowed in the Madras Overland Mail upon Sir Charles Turner, the retiring Chief Justice of the Presidency. Ostensibly a Conservative, Sir Charles was at heart a Liberal, and in many points a Radical. And this is praise! O, ye gods and little fishes!

DYNAMITE is to be left out in the cold, and in future our metropolis is to be wrecked with "blasting gelatine," a substance half as strong again as its better known rival. Where are things to end? It is, however, gratifying to learn that the new compound is both dangerous and difficult to store, as it is liable to explosion when frozen. Fancy if some fiend in human shape were to place a little "blasting gelatine" in a hole in the ice when all the élite of society were congregated together at some fashionable skating-ice? Horrible!

"OOTY" has had a fancy bazaar, which was a great success, notwithstanding the presence of the Governor, who looked in for a few moments. But fancy millinery on such an occasion! It is bad enough for a poor, overburdened spouse to have to pay for bonnets which his wife thinks she wants, but it is downright cruelty to compel a man to purchase—or rather to pay for—articles in this line which his better-half does not want, but which she fain must select.

ANOTHER great treat has also been organised at the same delightful abode of bliss, in the shape of a collection of "works of art," to peep at which involved payment of only four annas (6d.), but "what went ye out for to see?" Behold! A picture, described as "Caught in a Storm off Harwich," turned out to be a herring. "Lengthened sweetness long drawn out," instead of being, as might have been supposed, a drawing, was but two long rows of taffy. A pair of policeman's handcuffs did duty for "The Lynx in Repose." "Music hath charms" was typified by a penny whistle. "Tis but a little faded flower" was portrayed by a sickly stale cauliflower; while a pair of old socks were hung up and labelled a fragment. The roars of laughter which naturally followed the good-humoured sell indicated that the idea had been well received.

ALL servants of Government, covenanted or uncovenanted, are forbidden to receive complimentary or valedictory addresses in any form, or to accept testimonials of any kind, or to attend public meetings or complimentary entertainments of a formal and public character held in their honour. Good! But what about retiring Viceroys? Do these rules apply to them? We trow not—at least, did not when Lord Ripon was on his way home.

RECENTLY a well-known Burmese man at Barrackpore received a notice from his landlord, a Bengali Babu, that he must pay more rent, or quit. The explanation was an interesting commentary on recent events. "We hear that the Russians are coming to India in great numbers, and that there will be three Russians to every Englishman." Must there not be a great rise in rents?

WHAT becomes of old hats? They are, so it is said, sent to the Mubars, where the favourite costume of the natives is a "bell topper" and a "kamarbund." Thus clad the inhabitants barter cocoa nuts for hats, the favourites being white, with a black band. Bravo for the dealers in the Old Kent-road!

MAHABLESHWAR is setting a good example. Latterly ladies have initiated a system of driving up to the club in the evening with their own husbands. But were they wont to jog along with other people's husbands? Presumably. How naughty!

FANCY an hotel owned jointly by a Russian and a Turk! Could not our Government learn something from such a strange medley of nationalities.

THE Salvationists are not popular at Bangalore. On a recent occasion, as each preacher ascended the stage to address the audience, he was besprinkled with a mixture of assafetida and other odoriferous compounds. It was a sore trial to faith; but at length the "abomination" reached such a pitch that one of the preachers who had essayed to get a hearing hurried off the platform, crying, in a loud voice, "A dead man's liver is amongst us." His exit was the signal for the dispersion of the congregation. Well may the Spectator term the offenders "disturbing chemists."

In India there is a custom which may well be introduced; into the sober regions of the West. During the course of a ball impromptu races are organised amongst the men, flower-beds serving the stead of hurdles. Fancy a tight-laced lardy-dardy "masher" rushing, at the peril of his clothes, across an endless array of geraniums and roses, his garments besouled, his face heated; in a word, his whole "get-up" ruined—that would be a sight for the gods!

EXCITEMENT has been intense at Mahabeshwur in regard to the Badminton tournament, and many were the bets which were won and lost on the result. It must be interesting to see a venerable judge—all judges are venerable—handling the bat side by side with a fair maiden of a few summers. What if he fails in his efforts? Does he proceed to pass sentence on his own incompetence?

POOR Surat is in the deepest distress. It has got a brand-new municipal board, but it has not got water. Various schemes have been proposed, but all have fallen through owing to want of funds. To have a fine city without the wherewithal to quench thirst seems the beau ideal of the municipal mind.

IN England a criminal is detected by his general appearance—in India it is his footprints which bring him to justice. There the Police Department make a study of feet, here most of faces.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

MEMOIRS AND CORRESPONDENCE OF GENERAL JAMES STUART FRASER.*

That "hero worship" is the first duty of a biographer is an aphorism which, if it be not admitted in theory, is at least well-nigh invariably carried out in practice. Nor, in some cases, is the practice devoid of beneficial results. What, for instance, can be more delightful than Boswell's "Life of Johnson," a work which owes its charm to the circumstance that the author, utterly unable to realise that the subject of his memoir could by any possibility do wrong, portrayed with like genuineness vices and virtues, thus revealing to mankind a true and faithful picture of the man with all his weaknesses, all his failings, and all his noble qualities. But to deify all who differ with the central figure presented for criticism, to argue that all the world has been wrong and one individual alone right, is to travesty truth and to excite ridicule. Take the instance before us. Everyone who knows anything about the subject is aware that General Fraser was a first-rate officer of unimpeachable integrity and unswerving honesty; but equally it may be conceded that in regard to affairs at Haidarabad, "the centre of gravity" of the Indian Empire, where he was Resident from 1831 to 1852, holding views utterly at variance with those which commended themselves to the "powers that be," the latter may have had potent and sound reasons for the course adopted in obtaining a cession of the Berars. Surely it needed not to make imputations against the successive Viceroys, who one and all refused to adopt those measures of retrenchment and interference which in General Fraser's opinion would have "stayed the plague." Moreover, it is scarcely seemly, in the case of persons who in their lifetime held the high and important position of a Viceroy of India, that their memory should be desecrated with the alternative choice of knavery or folly. Liberality of sentiment is surely a primary qualification on the part of a biographer, and in this respect Colonel Hastings Fraser's effort to "whitewash" his father is singularly deficient. But let the work speak for itself. Talking of Lord Auckland's policy, it is analysed as amounting to this—"that the great duty of the Resident was to see that the Contingent was regularly paid, or was, at any rate, not more than four months in arrears; and that every precaution being taken, and every advantage seized, to secure the pay and permanence of the Contingent, all the diseased places in the Nizam's territories, even those that were dangerous to the general health of the Empire, might be left to fester and to inflame until some pretext was afforded for our 'direct interference in the management of the country.'" In other words, Lord Auckland was a disgrace to the coronet which encircled his brow—an ignoble man of debased humanity! Lord Ellenborough, his successor, fared somewhat better—he was only a fool. His lordship, we are told, "saw the urgent need of large measures of reform in the Haidarabad State, but, in spite of all General Fraser's assurances, could not conceive the possibility of their being introduced without some degree of military coercion;" moreover, he could only attend to "one thing at a time." Then came Lord Hardinge, who simply tired out the long-suffering Resident "by the apathy and obstruction with which all his efforts for the good of the Nizam's dominions were received at the official capital of India." His successor, his brilliant successor, as Colonel Fraser condescendingly terms him, Lord Dalhousie, came to an open rupture with the Resident, so the vials of the biographer's wrath are emptied upon the devoted head of the hot-tempered nobleman, who for a long period of years swayed the destinies of the Empire. He is guilty of "incredible inconsistency," his letters to the Nizam were "far from courteous," and "certain to give offence." His doctrines were "mistaken," his Khureetas were couched in "terms of gross insult and menace," his reasoning was "feeble and perverse," he was lenient to offenders when they happened to belong to his own family, though strict enough in other cases; his statements were "false," his inferences "erroneous," and much more in the same strain. Well may the writer guard himself against the supposition that he ever had "any personal feeling against Lord Dalhousie, to whom he was indebted for that first appointment on the Staff, which is always the most difficult step to obtain in India." The light of subsequent events has thrown a shade of doubt upon not a few of the acts of the great Pro-consul; but if an onslaught must be made upon his administrations, it may be questioned whether the policy pursued at Haidarabad is the weakest point in his armour. However, be this as it may, it is right to call "a spade a spade," and the Memoirs under review ought rather to have been entitled "An attack upon successive Governors-General for presuming to differ in opinion with General James Stuart Fraser."

JOTTINGS AND RECOLLECTIONS OF A BENGAL "QUI HYE."

Amongst the many "signs of the times" not the least noteworthy is the increasing interest taken in matters relating to India. It is not so very long ago that the East was a closed port to well-nigh everyone—a land, it was thought, of Nabobs, who spent their lives in nurturing the "Pagoda" tree, the shaking of which was reserved for the magnates of the "Hon. East India Company's Bahadur"—a region of currie-eaters and "chutney-mongers," with the concomitant mishaps of sallow faces and diseased livers. This was India as pictured in the imagination of the few who ever gave a thought to the doings and sayings of the far distant East. Now, thanks to steam, the Suez Canal, and the electric telegraph, tout cela est change, husbands run to and fro on privilege leave to get a glimpse of the "Mem Sahib" and her bairns. Younger sisters accompany their brothers to see something of the gay society of sunny Ind, and, truth to tell, at times to ensnare some wealthy parchment-skinned "burra Sahib," loaded with honours, and ready to share them with a fair and fresh-faced maiden from old England's shores; pleasure-seekers flit across the sea to learn the ways and study the habits of our swarthy brethren, whose destinies are in the hands of the Empress of the land; politicians interest themselves, too, in the far-off country which, henceforth, is likely to be the seat of "the Eastern Question"; maps are thumbed; histories are devoured; travels are ransacked; and the resources of literature are well-nigh exhausted in an effort to keep level with the demand for information on the part of an uninformed public. Such being the case, "The Jottings of a Bengal 'Qui Hye,'" which tell us of the way in which the world moves in the domains which are under the sway of the "Lord Bahadur" of the City of Palaces, cannot fail to be read with interest.

How goes a day in India? Here is the bill of fare: Rising at cockcrow, the only time of the day when the air in any way approaches to coolness, society commences operations with "Chota Hazree," a slight repast, varying in extent according to the "taste and fancy" of the eater; this accomplished, the men betake themselves to their avocations, and the fair sex sit in darkened rooms amidst the "maddening monotony" of the l'aukab, dreaming away existence till sunset, fortified in the meantime by a "tiffin" or luncheon; then begins their day's work, which generally consists of a canter or drive along the Mall or fashionable promenade, wherever it may be, the journey being enlivened by a visit to some enticing shop, where the "Mem Sahib" can please herself and distress her husband. Should it chance that destiny has located the hopeful family in a large town, such as Calcutta, there is a lounge where ices and cooling refreshments are devoured, digestion being assisted by the strains of a band, which discourses sweet music till dark; then comes dinner, quickly followed by a cup of coffee or tea, and bed. Such is life in the East.

But "Qui Hye" also initiates his readers into the mysteries of food, with its dainty "Kabobs," "Curries," "Country Captains," "Mulligatawny," "Pilaos," and the endless array of dishes calculated to please the palate and ruin the liver. He also tells us of the troubles of the domestic establishment with its "Robert-chies" (cooks), its "Khansamas" (stewards), its "Ayahs" (nurses), its "Syces" (grooms), to say nothing of a host of menials of every description, for in a tropical climate a servant is kept for well-nigh every duty under the sun.

Then there is outside "society," with its fakeers, the saintly, sensual beggars, who plunder, steal, and pry about, using religion as a cloak to indulgence; the "dacoits," the slim, oily thieves and robbers who prey upon their fellow-creatures with a degree of dexterity which well-nigh passes imagination; and last, but not least, the obsequious "Bukkus Walla," or pedlar, with his multifarious collection of goods and chattels, and "e-small" things.

* "Jottings and Recollections of a Bengal 'Qui Hye.'" By Louis Emanuel. London: Blackwood and Co.

All this and much more in the same strain will be found in "Qui Hye's" jottings, which are well adapted to while away a pleasant hour; light and interesting, they are a welcome companion when heavier works are cast aside for awhile.

ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.

Colonel Malletson's article in the June number will be found specially interesting, as it gives a rapid but clear precis of the Russian policy leading up to the Crimean war, as well as a good detailed account of the surprise on the morning of Inkerman. The gallant part played by the late Commander-in Chief in India, at that time a captain, is not so well known as it should be. A general officer, writing on "Inducements to Enlist," justly considers that the soldier has a right to assistance from his employer, the State, when he has faithfully completed his contract, and points out that not only is this but meagrely attempted, but also that if the soldier should obtain Government employment his pension or remuneration for past services is made to count against him in modifying emoluments. Lieut. the Hon. H. Shore, R.N., writes an interesting article on a little known subject, "The Aboriginal Tribes of North Formosa," with whom he has had personal contact; while from Russian sources Mr. Cromie has compiled a valuable account of the Cossacks. The very amusing novel of "Private Lawrie and his Love" is completed in this number, retaining its zest to the very end.

OBITUARY.

It is with very great regret that we record the death of Robert von Schlagintweit, who died, as Professor of Geography at Giessen, at the early age of 52, on the 6th. He was one of three brothers who, with real German perseverance and thoroughness, set to themselves the task of exploring the Himalayas, and their offshoots. Entering the mountain region from the South, and crossing and re-crossing many of the highest passes, previously unseen by "white faces," they at length reached Kashgar, where they were fated to lose one of their number, Adolf, who was murdered there, not, however, before having shown his mettle on more than one trying occasion. The deceased, Robert, was a quiet, pleasant, man, full of anecdote, and who could not fail favourably to impress any one whom he chanced to meet. He possessed that peculiar power of imparting information, in such a way that it cannot well be forgotten, which is so rare among "Professors" everywhere, and the value of which can hardly be overrated. The Berlin Correspondent of The Times writes:—"Professor Robert von Schlagintweit, the eminent ethnographer, and geographer, died on Saturday in Giessen at the age of 52. The name of the deceased—at one time probably more familiar in England than it is now—is chiefly connected with the journey of scientific investigation made by him in 1854-57 in Central India and the Himalayas in conjunction with his brothers Hermann and Adolphus. The expedition was fitted out at the expense of the King of Prussia and the British East India Company, and added many important and interesting facts to our knowledge in the domains of geography, meteorology, geology, and ethnology. The enterprising travellers ascended some of the loftiest and hitherto untrodden peaks of the Himalayas, and penetrated into districts that had never before been visited by Europeans. One of the brothers, Adolphus, paid for his temerity with his life, as he was murdered in Kashgar in 1857. An account of the journey was published in English under the title of 'Results of a Scientific Mission to India and High Asia.' Professor Robert von Schlagintweit also travelled in North America, and wrote several shorter works on his experiences there. For several years previous to his death he had filled the post of Professor of Geography at Giessen."

WITH Mr. Blandford's warning in mind, the cultivators and district officers of Upper India will begin to watch anxiously for signs of rain about three weeks hence in Lower Bengal. On the other hand, the summer has so far been abnormally hot and dry, and there is already a serious scarcity of drinking water in one or two districts. Rain is much wanted throughout the province, and any delay of the monsoon will have grave consequences.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 16, 1885.

INDIAN COAST DEFENCES.

INDIA, as we roughly term the whole of our dominions south of the Himalayas, may be said to be not unlike the ace of diamonds, the two upper sides being represented by the mountains and their offshoots, and the two lower by the ocean.

Political circumstances have given us occasion to refer at some length to the North-Western Frontier, and may, ere long, induce us to invite the attention of our readers to the North-Eastern Frontier of our Empire, stretching from the point where the Brahmapootra leaves the hills, away past the highest mountains in the world, to the spot where the Ganges, now no longer an infant stream, bursts from its rocky swaddling clothes, and flows onward to fertilise the broad lands of Behar and Bengal.

But our present purpose is with the lower half of the diamond, the breadth of which may be said to be represented by a line drawn from Kurrachee to Calcutta, and its length on either side, roughly, about 2,000 miles, wholly coast line, more or less accessible to an enemy.

As to the North-Eastern and North-Western Frontiers Nature has done her best; and, if we do not protect these against hostile assault, we alone are to blame, and must be content to bear the consequences.

But, as regards the coast, Nature, which, so far as the northern half of India is concerned, has aided us by giving us a natural, and, on the whole, easily defensible, mountain frontier, no longer offers us any assistance. On the contrary, she is strictly impartial. The same waters which bear our men-of-war and transports will equally support those of our enemies, would buoy up a "Popoff," could it float, to bombard Madras, or to set fire to our coal depôts at Aden.

Now, proverbially, everything comes to the man who waits long enough. This saying is always taken to mean that what we want will come to us in due time. When the oracle told Croesus that if he crossed the river he would destroy a great kingdom, he advanced avec cœur léger, never for a moment thinking that the kingdom to be destroyed was his own. The above phrase, too, like the old oracular utterance, has a double meaning; it refers to evil as well as to good luck. We may wait, and we hope we shall long wait, ere the sound of an enemy's guns be heard on the shores of either England or India; but we cannot expect to be always exempt. We are bound to be prepared. Let us see how far, as regards India, this is the case.

From the whole littoral of India rises the same cry, that the coast is utterly unprotected. Where tidal rivers are kind enough to furnish an unlimited supply of shoals and sandbanks, the removal of buoys and beacons may be a tolerably efficient resource. Calcutta might, for instance, be thus protected, and, perhaps, Rangoon; but to an exposed coast—to Madras, let us say, as being incomparably the largest city absolutely open to attack from the sea—what protection have we afforded?

It used to be said, don't mention these things, why call an enemy's attention to them? We have always thought this stuff—we can't call it argument or reasoning—to be on a par with the idea—if it can be so called—of the ostrich who thinks herself safe if her head be deeply buried in the sand. She cannot see her foes, therefore they cannot see her.

Now, we may be sure that our enemies, present or prospective, know every weak spot in our armour; that the War Offices of Paris, Berlin, and St. Petersburg, have exact plans of the curious erections which, in England, are popularly taken for fortresses. We know, too, that our Admiralty—most laudably—publishes charts showing the soundings and currents on every coast in Her Majesty's dominions. But we are not to suppose that only Englishmen purchase these charts.

As to Madras, an interesting, and, indeed, important, correspondence has been going on in the local papers. The place is wholly unprotected. Trincomalee is scarcely less so. Our most important coaling stations, Aden, Singapore, and Hong Kong, are absolutely at the mercy of an enemy's gunboat carrying artillery of any calibre. Fancy our whole fleet in Eastern waters being paralysed because an enemy had set these three stations on fire after helping himself to coal enough to speed him on his way! Yet this is no imaginary danger. Attack has usually been stronger than defence, but the inequality bids fair to become greater than ever. For of late it has been found possible to fire a shell containing nitro-glycerine without exploding the charge as it leaves the gun or mortar. And what the effect of such a shell, projected from a distance of, say, four miles, would have on an excitable and susceptible populace, it is awful to contemplate. As Lord Overstone said of a hostile occupation of London, "It must never be." Yet no efficient steps, so far as we can see, are being taken to prevent such a catastrophe.

Journals from all quarters alike complain of neglect (each as regards his own port) in the matter of means of defence. Anywhere "coolies," or "navvies," or what not, can be got to raise earthworks. Nothing can be better, —yet no works, not even thick mud walls, which were thought impregnable till the late William Jacob began firing live shell point-blank at them—are aught but a farce till we have guns to fire from them. "Ask the War Office," it may be said, "for guns, we will extemporise earthworks." Ask the War Office by all means—call spirits from the vasty deep. Do they come? Will any member of the House of Commons move for a return of the number of guns which the Government of India has applied for, and has never been able to get?

But this is no new question. Long before the conception of the Suez Canal had taken definite shape, in the days when France at Marseilles, and Russia by land, were not perceptibly nearer to India than England is, the old Duke of Wellington, whose authority in military matters will not be disputed, said that a naval attack on India would be the most efficient weapon which Russia could use against us. Combined with an attack on the side of Afghanistan (of which the Duke, probably expecting his successors to be men of sense rather than babblers and dreamers, never could have thought possible) how infinitely more dangerous! Englishmen are not supposed to be mercurial; yet we mistake them much if the simultaneous bombardment of Scarborough, Brighton, and Holyhead would not give even them an unpleasant sensation.

Let any rational being consider the effect on the millions of Hindustan were the news received that Madras had been bombarded, and a doubtful engagement fought, say, near Candahar. What would be the bazaar version of the story? Would not every budmash in India think he had a free hand? Yet this appalling risk is being coolly—let us rather say, foolhardily—faced, or shirked.

"A fleet," said the Duke—it is wonderful how accurately his foresight describes the present position—"supplied with provisions, could reach the Cape, which is, I believe, nearly defenceless, and with a diminished peace establishment of troops and no naval force. This colony would be seized, all descriptions of supplies and refreshments would here be received. Trincomalee, equally defenceless, without garrison, the troops in Ceylon having been again recently reduced in number, would fall. . . If the two Powers are really in a state of hostility, I don't know of any plan by which Russia could strike a blow against this country, which would affect more real interests, all of which are more or less in relation with those parts of the world in which it is supposed that each of the Governments has objects which would bring the two into collision." Fifty years have lapsed since the Great Duke wrote these words, and not much has been done towards the defence of our extended Empire. Not only is Trincomalee absolutely, but Bombay is almost, defenceless. As a Field officer says in the Fortnightly for April, the most pressing need of the hour is the fortification of commercial ports and coaling stations with the necessary supply of guns for the new works. Till these are ready the fleet is half paralysed. Guns take time to make, ships take time—often years—to build; yet nothing is done, and excuses are made that the best model has not yet been discovered. Call ourselves practical? Let us abandon that claim to Germans, Americans, no matter to whom, so that we do not pretend to it. Why don't we give up railways because we have not discovered "perpetual motion?" It would at least be consistent.

RUSSIA ON THE RED SEA.

VERY serious and important news reaches us from Abyssinia. At the time when Lord (then Sir Robert) Napier stormed Magdala, releasing Mr. Rassam, our Envoy, and his fellow-prisoners, one would have been inclined rather to laugh at the idea that the "alliance" of any European State with Abyssinia would, or could, be worth even casual mention. But it would seem that this is by no means the case. The protection of the Greek form of Christianity, in "the Holy Places," by "Holy" Russia, and the attempt to exclude the "Latin" Christians, was the (ostensible) cause of the Crimean War. Russia has always used her Greek Christianity, such as it is, as a means of flirtation with Copts, Armenians, and all and sundry the sects which are pleased to call themselves Christians. Abyssinians, eating raw flesh, and wrenching hands and feet off in the hideous punishment which they call "quadruple amputation," also think fit to describe themselves by the same sacred appellation. That they do so is enough for the Russians. It may be remembered (for it is as well to record these things, and piece them, as it were, together) that Sir W. Hewett was not, on the whole, at all courteously treated on his late visit to "King" Johannes' Court—or pigsty. No doubt the ubiquitous Russ had already been at work. But we now hear that a telegram from St. Petersburg, published in the Indépendance Belge, states that the Negus of Abyssinia has requested the protection of Russia against England and Italy. As a first consequence of this demand a treaty of commerce has been concluded between Abyssinia and Russia, exclusively favourable to Russian interests. Now it is important to remark that Abyssinia has not, de jure or de facto, one inch of the Red Sea littoral. In days when we had not a mere ornamental nonentity at the Foreign Office, the claim of the French to Obokh and that of the Italians to Assab, both said to have been acquired, by purchase, from some real (or imaginary) chief, were challenged. (As to the manner in which the attempt of the French surreptitiously to hoist their flag on Perim, just facing Aden, was defeated, "is it not written" in that incomparable book, the "Lays of Ind"?) But neither of these nations had, at that time, if even they have at present, the same interest in interrupting our direct communication with India as Russia has.

Russia has now availed herself of the (assumed) position of the Czar as Protector-General of the Oriental forms of Christianity, to offer patronage and assistance to Abyssinians visiting Palestine. The consequences are that King Johannes has thrown himself into the open arms of his wily "friend," who has persuaded him that England and Italy are plotting against him.

Among the many "policies" invented by the Gladstone Cabinet was the following. We quote the St. James's Gazette as regards the "policy" and its probable consequences:—

We hinted to our Italian allies that the relief of Kassala was a glorious opportunity for a young nation longing for distinction, and that Massowa was very much at their service. The prudent Italians occupied Massowa, but did not see that they were bound to seek renown in the interior. The result of all this cleverness is, we hear, that the Negus of Abyssinia is seeking the protection of Mr. Gladstone's old friend the Divine Figure from the North against Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. Gladstone's other friends the Italians. An exclusive commercial treaty with Russia has been already concluded, we are told, and we shall soon of course have a Russian naval station on the Red Sea road to India.

We are loth to drop this matter without drawing the moral, which is, clearly enough, to be independent of the Suez Canal, at whatever cost. France (and Russia, should she care to force the Dardanelles) has us on the flank—we may say literally and littorally on the hip—so long as we are tied to this road. A large squadron at each end would not suffice to keep it open, for war-ships, and other ships, have a marvellous knack of sinking where they can bar an enemy's passage.

Whatever the Suez Canal may be in time of peace, we we are confident that, in war-time, Lord Palmerston's prevision would be verified. The greatest living authority on naval matters wrote us, only the other day, to the same effect.

We have only to solicit the earnest attention of whatever Government may be in power to the foregoing considerations. "La plus belle femme du monde ne peut donner que ce qu'elle a," says the French proverb; and we trust our Rulers will bear in mind that Abyssinia does not possess, and, therefore, can neither give to Russia, nor withhold from her, any part of the Red Sea Coast line. Any such pretension should be resisted with more vigour than has, of late, been shown in any diplomatic encounter.

AFGHAN JEWS.

We are indebted to the Jewish World for the following extracts from a most interesting article, which our space does not allow us to reprint in extenso, but which is well worthy perusal, regarding the Jews in Afghanistan. At a period when Jews in Germany are being "baited" under the personal influence of one of the Emperor's chaplains (and doubtless with his full approval, or he would dismiss the said chaplain, whom a word from him would silence), when the latter is permitted—we blush to recall the fact—to deliver in an important London club a lecture consisting of mere abuse of the Hebrews, when the said Hebrews are, though not “judicially” as of yore, being burnt alive in Russia, it may be worth bearing in mind that their treatment in this country, where they are regarded, and deservedly so, as are their fellow-citizens, is not likely to be unknown to their co-religionists in Afghanistan, whose sympathies it may greatly influence in case of need. It would not be the first time that the mouse has helped the lion:—

Scattered here and there in the more thickly populated districts of Afghanistan is a fairly large number of Eastern Jews—Jews, differing but little from their brethren of the Occident in type and in appearance, in custom and in ceremonial. They are more frequently met with towards the northern boundaries of the country, abutting on Kurdistan and Persia and the borders of the Three Great Khanates of Central Asia. They stretch away in small communities among the man-stealing Turkomans who ill-treat and abuse them, among the fanatic Heratees who despise and oppress them, on to Bokhara and Samarkand and Candahar, where existence is gradually being rendered more and more tolerable for them. They are of every class and variety, ranging from the native-born Jew, who, à la the genuine Turkoman, drags a Persian man-slave at his hoise's tail and thrashes the poor wretch with all the vigour and perseverance of an Afghan master—to the emigrant from Kurdistan, who is but a hewer of wood and drawer of water to his Moslem lord; from the wealthy Cabul merchant, with connections in every corner of Central Asia, to his poorer co-religionist who, runner and messenger combined, discharges the duty of postman and telegraphist in a way that excites the admiration and wonder of Western travellers. The Afghan Jews who are employed as agents and messengers are among the most trusty of the trusted. Honest and reliable, Europeans have no hesitation when dealing with an Afghan Jew where they would not dream of depending upon his Moslem fellow-countrymen. The Afghans—as all who have read anything about them are aware—claim to be themselves descended from the ancient Israelites. The Jewish physiognomy of the people of the country has frequently been commented upon by travellers and Englishmen generally resident in Cabul. It has often, too, been stated that the Afghans call themselves “Beni Israel,” Children of Israel. But this is erroneous. What they do call themselves will presently appear. They call themselves, not “Beni Israel,” or Sons of Israel, as has often been asserted, but “Beni Melik Talut,” Descendants of King Saul—“Talut” being their equivalent for Saul, King of Israel. Most travellers and writers give this fact, but go no further. The tradition accounting for the Jewish origin of the Afghans is almost unknown; and was altogether unknown until about one hundred years ago. It was found in an unpublished Persian manuscript of the “Asrârul Afaghina,” or “Secrets of the Afghans,” written in Pushto—the language of Afghanistan—by Hussaim the son of Sabir, and translated into Farsi by Maulawi Khairuddin. And it is so interesting, as a legendary variant of Jewish history, that we give the tradition as current among the people to this day. In the days of Saul, King of Israel, when the Israelites warred with Agag, Ruler of the Amalekites, the latter proved victors, and captured the ark of the Covenant among the plunder they obtained from the Jews. Under the impression that this was the “God of the Hebrews,” the conquerors threw it into the fire, thinking it would be consumed; but the fire had no power over it. They then took an axe and attempted to cleave it; but the steel flew from the haft, and wounded the hand of every man who attempted to destroy it. They then put it into their temple among their own gods; when, behold! all the idols bowed to it. At length they fastened the ark upon the back of a cow and sent it into the wilderness. About this time the Jews, despairing of success in their contest with the Amalekites, came to Samuel the Prophet, and asked him to set a King over them who should lead them in battle. Samuel demanded of them if, in the event of their going to war, they would be obedient, and they replied Yes. Whereupon, the legend runs, the Archangel Gabriel came down from Heaven, and, delivering a wand to the Jewish prophet, said, “It is the command of the Most High that the person whose stature shall correspond with the length of this wand, he shall be King of Israel.” Melik Taluk, that is King Saul—says the Afghan Tradition—was at that time a poor herdsman of an inferior rank in life. Happening one day to lose a bullock for which his master held him accountable, he bethought him of applying to the Prophet for advice and help. He accordingly waited upon Samuel. The moment the latter caught sight of the lofty stature and splendid build of the young herdsman, he called out to those by him to apply to the man the wand of the archangel Gabriel. They did so, and his height was exactly the measure of the rod. He died a martyr in a war with the infidels, but left two sons, Birkia and Irmia, both of whom served valiantly under King David. Birkia had a son named Afghan; and Irmia a son named Usbeg. This legend of the Jewish origin of the Afghans was thought worth investigating by so eminent a scholar as Sir William Jones. The tradition must only be taken for what it is worth. The true professing Jews of the country have no manner of belief in the common origin of themselves and their Moslem fellow-countrymen. At the same time tradition is often so true in the main that it is quite possible that there may be a large admixture of Jewish blood in the native races of Afghanistan. There are probably about forty thousand Jews altogether scattered throughout Afghanistan at the present day, the majority of them residing along the northern and north-western boundary. About two thousand live in Cabul. Many of these Jews of Cabul are very rich, and have business connections extending over the whole of Central Asia. They state the number of small Jewish communities scattered throughout the country to amount to upwards of sixty, and add that, for the most part, they are very ancient. The closest connection is said to exist between these colonies and the capital, Cabul, messengers passing regularly to and fro among them with all the regularity and safety of an organised postal system. Of course, this puts the Jews at an enormous advantage in all business and political matters, and puts a deal of indirect influence in their hands. They are rarely interfered with, as the official classes are liberally subsidised, and the Emir is fully aware of the advantages he derives from so profitable a class of residents. Cabul is an admirable trading centre for the Jews, and the community has been and is steadily increasing in numbers and wealth. They labour, of course, under the usual disabilities to which Jews are subjected in all Mohammedan countries. They are obliged, for example, to wear a rope round the waist, and are liable to punishment if they venture to ride abroad upon either an ass or a horse. They are also obliged to wear a three-cornered fur cap, so as to be readily recognised by the Moslems, lest, perchance, any true believer should, in error, be led to give the greeting of peace to one who is an infidel. For the most part they are fairly well-treated in Afghanistan itself, though they pay heavily for the protection accorded to them.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JUNE 22, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, June 2nd; Madras and Allahabad, May 31st; Calcutta, May 31st.

THE state of affairs in our own politics is still wholly uncertain. Lord Salisbury (who would have in his Cabinet as Secretary, and Lord Harris as Under-Secretary, for India, being his own Foreign Secretary) will take office only on the understanding that he does not come in to perform in a farce, and that he is to encounter no factious opposition in the Commons. Such an undertaking he is unable to obtain from Mr. Gladstone. The Morning Post hopes that something may be settled to-day; other papers are less sanguine. To see ourselves as others see us, let us glance at what is said in India and abroad.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times is merely repeating the talk of Anglo-Indians here when he says:—

News of the defeat and resignation of the Ministry came as a surprise on the Indian public. The first sentiment expressed on all sides was one of wonder that the Parliament which for five years quietly allowed Ministers to humiliate the British name and bring the Empire into danger should at last expel those Ministers for proposing an extra tax on beer and spirits. Anglo-Indians and natives alike find it difficult to understand how the beer tax can be regarded as a more important matter than the cession of Penjdeh or the death of General Gordon, but on this point their views seem hopelessly at variance.

BERLIN knows more of St. Petersburg than St. Petersburg knows of itself. The subjoined from Berlin is significant enough:—

Strange reports were afloat last night in diplomatic circles concerning the plans of Russia in the eventuality of Lord Salisbury succeeding in forming an Administration. Among other things it was affirmed that the Russian Cabinet had assured Mr. Gladstone that if he would succeed in preventing the Conservatives from accepting office advantageous terms would be proposed for settling the Afghan Question without any further delay. It is evident that both as regards the Afghan Question and the Egyptian Question St. Petersburg and Paris have more to expect from a Liberal than a Conservative Administration.

AT Vienna it is, says The Times, remarked in political circles that the disagreement between Mr. Gladstone and Prince Bismarck is now matter of notoriety, and that if the Liberal Cabinet were reconstituted, its first object would be to try and make friends with France and Russia, both of which Powers, encouraged by Germany, would seize the opportunity of raising new demands. The attitude of the Liberal party towards the Conservative is generally condemned.

THE semi-official Presse of Vienna thinks it quite in keeping with Mr. Gladstone's egotism and recklessness that, having failed disastrously in his own attempts to govern, he should use all the remnants of his political strength to render the task of ruling impossible to others.

MR. GLADSTONE has, it is stated, been offered an earldom; but, being enamoured of his own casuistry, which may "go down" in the Commons, but would assuredly not "take" in the Lords, has refused it. A dukedom would be a cheap price to pay for his relegation to the serene atmosphere of the Upper House. It may be profane to wish that there were yet another House whither he could be sent, and never be heard at all. But, to Mr. Gladstone, this would be purgatory, if not worse. And to purgatory we have no wish to send him; for, had he to purge all the sins against his country which he has committed, he would never get out at all.

We take the following from the Pioneer:—

Where are the Keys of India? Lord Beaconsfield said, "not in Herat, but in London"; but it has remained for Lord Dufferin to solve the question by a bon mot. A discussion recently arose in the Viceroy's presence as to whether the keys were at Penjdeh, Herat, Zolfikar, or elsewhere; and after listening for some little time to the various grave theories advanced, his Excellency laughingly remarked: "The Keys of India are where they should be; in the pocket of the master of the house."

REUTER assures us that the Russian telegraph line has been extended to Sarakhs. Nothing more probable; let any reasonable man think what this means as to facility of communication. When will our telegraph to within the same distance, say, of Herat, be completed, and at what rate is it being pushed on?

WOULD the incident mentioned in The Times, and here subjoined, have occurred in the days of Lord Beaconsfield?

SINJAO, June 16.—The following incident has just occurred. The British Consul, retiring to Resht from visiting the Mission camp, lost a mule near Sarakhs. He sent his clerk with a civil note to the Russian officer commanding at that place, asking for his assistance to recover the animal. No reply was returned, but the clerk was arrested and sent as a prisoner to Askaband.

OUR readers will be interested in the result of Lieutenant Jennings's late mission. The Admiralty and Horse Guards' Gazette thus summarises what has been allowed to become public:—

Lieutenant Jennings, Royal Engineers, has returned from the secret mission undertaken by orders from the Government of India. He was instructed to examine the country between the Persian Gulf and Herat, in order to ascertain whether it is practicable to disembark an army corps and march to Herat without touching Afghan or Persian territory. Lieutenant Jennings seems to have succeeded in the object of his journey. After many hardships while travelling as a scientific trader, being fired at and pursued, he reached within five marches of Herat, encountering only sixty miles of desert. The latter portion of the explored region is well wooded and watered. He has been congratulated by Sir Donald Stewart for the very successful result of his mission. In the event of war the Russians could be attacked on their flank. There is, however, this drawback to his observations, that he has also discovered an easy route for the advance of Russia to the Indian Ocean.

WE are glad to see that Moulvi Sami-ulla Khan, the lately appointed Judge of Rae Bareilly, who accompanied Lord Northbrook to Egypt, has received the C.M.G. for his services in that country. We believe that the Moulvi is the first Indian gentleman on whom this Order has been conferred, and congratulate him on the fact. Now that, in accordance with Lord Beaconsfield's initiative, so much abused in Midlothian, but so gladly adopted by the arch-abuser when it suited him to borrow from his rival, Indian troops are likely often to serve west of Hindostan, we hope to hear of this decoration, designed especially to reward Colonial Service, being conferred on many a gallant Native soldier or able administrator.

It seems that, as far as can be ascertained, the deaths caused by the late earthquake in Cashmere will, at all events, not exceed 500, including, we are glad to say, no European. "Those," says the Graphic, who have visited the "Happy Valley," "will easily picture to themselves the consternation which fell on its easy-going inhabitants when their houses began to tumble about their ears, and the ground quaked and trembled as if about to give birth to some monster. Srinuggur, the capital, is a fair city and a picturesque—from a little distance. It has been called the "Venice of the East," because all traffic is carried on by means of the canals and affluents which branch out of the placid Jhelum on both sides. The river cuts the town in two, as the Thames does London, and is spanned by seven bridges constructed entirely of wood. On some of the lower ones there are houses—dirty-looking, dilapidated, edifices, which in Europe would lend themselves to the writer of mediæval fiction. The beauty of the city mainly consists in the delightful absence of uniformity and pretentiousness. Scarcely two houses are alike; not one has the slightest claim to architectural elegance. Yet, jumbled together, and often leaning over the inevitable waterway, they present a very attractive picture when viewed en masse. But they are by no means the sort of structures to withstand an earthquake, their only merit in that connection being that they are mainly constructed of wood. Nor would the inhabitants be likely to encounter the phenomenon with equanimity of soul. Your Cashmeri is a splendid fellow to look at, and a jolly fellow to have dealings with—barring his stupendous mendacities; but in the matter of courage he is a very chicken, especially when the danger happens to be of a novel sort. When famine visited the valley some years ago, the people just laid down and died in their villages, without, we believe, a single attempt being made to break into the Maharajah's overflowing granaries."

A PLEA for the Income-tax. The Indu Prokash advocates the reimposition of this tax in India. "That next year," it remarks, "the Government will have to devise new sources of revenue is becoming daily clearer; and, if things continue as at present for some months more, the expenses of the Afghan Boundary Commission alone will necessitate the revision of the license tax and the reimposition of the import duties. We observe that some of our contemporaries do not look with approval on the prospect of an income-tax. It seems to us, however, that an income-tax will not only remove the defects of the license tax, which are glaring enough, but will have the supreme merit of making all classes—official as well as non-official—interested in how the State money, which is collected from the people, is spent. As things stand at present, the officials, being excluded from taxation, do not care how much is spent, and for what. It is an income-tax alone that can give them a true sense of responsibility, and improve the prospect of financial economy in India." Most sincerely do we wish that the payment by officials in this country of the income-tax would "give them a true sense of responsibility, and improve the prospect of financial economy." We have never, as yet, found this to be the case. The "sense of responsibility," in the "true" meaning of the phrase, has long been wanting. As to the "prospect of financial economy," did not the present Government come in on this very pretext, and what is the result?—£100,000,000—we are tired of counting the ciphers—expenditure! No! Prokash, this won't do. It is not "moonlight," but "moonshine."

WE quoted recently a letter from a correspondent, complaining of the non-completion of the Sukkur-Bukkur-Rohri Bridge. It will be seen from the notice we excerpt from the Civil and Military Gazette of May 5 that the steam-ferry at that most important point is transporting but 250 waggons daily; not, we presume, without extra exertion, as, if this were the normal rate, it would not be worth while to mention it. Let any military reader ask himself what such a dribble would be worth to an army in the field. Why not finish the bridge and transport fifty times that quantity? Whatever public works may have to be stopped, let this at least be the exception. Build the bridge; do it, and have done with it!

The Indus Valley Railway authorities are now transporting 250 loaded waggons daily across the Indus by the Sukkur steam-ferry, thus hastening the collection of eight months' supplies for 25,000 men at Peshin.

At a time when the setting-in of the South-West monsoon is being looked for, considerable anxiety is of course felt lest it should be delayed; and the Calcutta correspondent of the Times opportunely reminded us, a few days since, that about a year ago Mr. Blandford, meteorological Reporter to the Indian Government, propounded the theory of a connection between the Himalayan snow-fall and the monsoon rains. While careful to state that the facts observed were not yet sufficient to warrant any positive assertion, he inclined to the belief that a late and heavy fall of snow on the Himalayas was always followed by a deficiency in the monsoon rains. If this theory be correct, the outlook this year would seem to be gloomy, as accounts from all parts of the Himalayas describe the snows of last winter and spring as unusually heavy, and as lying long. The weather is still cold in most of the North-Western hill stations, and traces of snow are still visible on the hills near Simla.

THE subjoined statement exhibits what may be said to have been a foregone conclusion, namely, that Bengal takes the lead of all India in literary productiveness. The disproportion between that province and its nearest competitor, the Punjab, 2,218 to 1,786, is even greater than we should have supposed. The Liberal, to whom we are indebted for the facts in the tabulated form, does not say whether or not the same rule, as to the exclusion of Government publications, especially those of a semi-official character, is in every instance observed; but this we presume to be the case, as otherwise the results would be illusory.

From the reports on publications issued and registered in India during the year 1883 we have prepared the following table showing the literary activity in the several provinces:—

Madras	818
Bombay	1,434
Bengal	2,218
N. W. P.	960
Punjab	1,786
Central Provinces	6
British Burmah	231
Assam	5
Mysore	66
Hyderabad	1
Ajmere	1

Bengal thus stands foremost in literary activity among all the provinces in India. Babu Chunder Nath Bose, the Bengal librarian, says that the average number of books received in a year has not up to this time exceeded 1,600; so the number in 1883 was more than thirty-seven per cent. in excess of the average.

As regards the burning question, we quite agree with the Kossid-e-Mumbai, which, indeed, merely puts into other words our own sentiments so often expressed:—

We are surprised to see that the Russian Government is allowed so easily to turn the tide of events according to its own desire, simply by its impudence and obstinacy. The cession of Penjdeh to the Northern Bear looks very much like a reward for the audacious onslaught on the Afghans by the Russian General. The attitude of our Prime Minister has been strangely vacillating. At this rate, no scruple will be made to give up Herat itself to Russia, provided she gives a solemn promise not to make her way to India through that channel. There is no saying how long this so-called peace is likely to last. We are sure it is nothing but a strategical move on the part of Russia to take us by surprise at a further date.

How often is the question to be asked on paper, and when will it be asked, and an answer insisted on, in the House, why we have no Consul in Central Asia? Every insect has its feelers; has the British Lion sunk to the level of an insect without antennæ?—

Some little time ago the Russian Government announced its intention of posting a Consul to Bombay; though nothing, so far as we know, came of it. England has a Consul at Tiflis; but if he gives the Russian authorities any grounds for uneasiness, they generally manage to get him removed. We have no recognised agents, of course, in Central Asia. No objection can be raised to the despatch of a Russian diplomatic agent to Calcutta, but it would be ridiculous to agree with the theory which will, no doubt, be put forward in some quarters at home, that it affords one more proof of Russia's entirely pacific intentions.

Certainly it would. India is at this moment full of Russian emissaries. No cæquatur for India should be granted to a Russian Consul unless we stipulate for Consuls in Tiflis, Tashkend, Samarkand, and Khiva.

PEOPLE about to start for India may think it not unwise to learn a thing or two from a "Waler." We can answer for the efficacy of the remedy, even when used, as powder, without the "firestick," alias red-hot poker:—

A writer in the Sydney Morning Herald says:—Accident has disclosed to me a remedy for household plagues, and I ask you to publish it, so that all who suffer from the pests may obtain relief during the coming season. I observed that the flies fled precipitately from the fumes of hot tar (coal) which my men were spreading on the basement of a room, and, knowing that carbolic acid was the substance thus going off from the tar, I purchased some and found it acted like magic both on flies and mosquitoes.

I at first used a small kerosine stove to evaporate the acid, but a little experience showed that a good firestick heated in the fire and laid in a tin dish with a tablespoonful of the acid is the more efficient plan. Dense white fumes arise, and flies and mosquitoes instantly make for the windows. If the windows and doors be kept shut for only a few minutes every fly and mosquito will be found dead. The effect was marvellous, as the comfort of the house, minus flies, &c., is great; and, as carbolic acid is not dear, this comfort is procurable at small expense of money and trouble. It is necessary to remember that the acid, although not explosive, is yet inflammable, and will catch fire and blaze up like coal tar if carelessly used at an open fire. The fumes are not only harmless, but wholesome to human beings.

We insert the subjoined from the Frankfurter Zeitung, a journal usually well-informed:—

RUSSIAN TROOPS ON THE AFGHAN FRONTIER.—The Frankfurter Zeitung gives the following as the distribution of the Russian force on the Afghan border, between the rivers Heri Rud and Murghab:—In Khaka 100 infantry, 400 cavalry, and three guns; at Sarakhs 300 infantry, 400 cavalry, and three guns; at Pul-i-Khatun 200 infantry and 100 cavalry; at Kushid Kala 2,020 infantry, 800 cavalry, and four guns; between Kustid Kala and Merv 2,060 infantry, 600 cavalry, and four guns; between Pul-i-Khisi and Penjdeh 1,200 infantry, 800 cavalry, and four guns; at Zulikar 400 infantry; and at Akrobat 200 cavalry. The date of these advices is not stated; but it will doubtless be safe to multiply by ten the numbers given in each case.

We cannot say that the subjoined excerpts from the Delhi Gazette of May 23rd are very encouraging; but the Afghan is, like the eel, somewhat slippery. It would be awkward to find that our officers had helped to fortify Herat, and that we had given the Amir rifles and cannon, only to increase our difficulties in Afghanistan. (It is not to be forgotten that some weeks since seven million roubles in gold were stated by the Times to be on their way to the Amir.)

There is a report in Government official circles in Odessa that the Amir has unreservedly ceded Penjdeh to Russia, and is now treating for the cession of Herat also, on the payment of some millions of roubles.

Rumours are current at Cabul that the Amir, on being reproached by the leading chiefs for forming an alliance with England, stated that the agreement entered into at Rawul Pindi was only a ruse to gain time, money, and arms.

It is something to learn that the latest news from the Bolan shows appreciable progress in constructing the new railway. Staff and material have arrived, and the engine is beginning to push along the pass. There has been a $4\frac{1}{2}$ -foot flood at Pir Chowki, which did not, however, interfere at all with the work.

We are glad to see that the newspaper rumours of the invasion, with the consent of our Consul, by the Sultan of Zanzibar, of territory said to have been ceded—provided, as we presume, it were ceded by its rightful owner—to Germany, are unfounded. Every Consul has the power of embroiling his country with some foreign Power, and it is satisfactory to find that Sir J. Kirk, who has not always been remarkable for his discretion, has persuaded the Sultan not to trench on lands his right to which is not clear. All praise to Sir John Kirk; he might easily have added another to the innumerable imbroglios bequeathed by a hopelessly incompetent Government as souvenirs, to a people who will, assuredly, have bitter reason to remember their official existence.

We are glad to learn from the fortnightly Circular of Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson, of 38, Mincing-lane, that the quality of the new season's Indian teas "is good generally, and that of the Terai teas very fine. Masters," it is added (received by mail from Assam), "show that fine tea is being made."

Here is another instance—we have not of late been in want of them—of the position to which a Government of incapables has reduced England. The idea of being "officially" told to "furnish Russia with serious guarantees of good faith." Good faith to Russia, a Power which never has kept faith in any one instance! What would have been Pitt's answer to such an insult had he now been in power? He would have had an ample apology, or have laid in ashes every Russian town on the Baltic and the Black Sea.

The Novoe Vremya considers that if the British Government wishes to bring the frontier negotiations to a satisfactory and speedy termination, it must furnish Russia with serious guarantees of good faith, so that the latter Power may not be met with fresh difficulties in Central Asia in the near future. It declares:—"Lord Salisbury knows that the future negotiations on the subject of the frontier cannot retain the same character as they bore when Mr. Gladstone was at the head of affairs. The Russian Government has positively no grounds for putting faith in the alleged peaceable inclinations and friendliness of the Marquis, simply for the reason that he finds it convenient temporarily to place the Afghan question in the background."

Chit Chat.

It is a significant comment on recent events in the political world that King Theebaw of Burmah has opened treaty negotiations with Russia. But why? Can there be any other reason than that the latter is considered the coming king?

Indian corn has found a new outlet and a new use—it is exported largely to Italy, where it is made into "macaroni."

The District Charitable Society in Calcutta is in trouble. First of all, a Babu has embezzled Rs.39,000; and now it appears that out of sixty members of the Committee the average attendance was but five or six; then, to crown all, the paid auditor "grossly and systematically abused the confidence placed in him." Certainly things do not look encouraging.

Certain very ugly rumours are current in Hyderabad and some goods alleged to have been supplied to an officer of position; but the matter can never rest where it is, and time will, doubtless, clear it up.

BRAHMINISM is exultant. The fair held at Soron, in the State district, North-West Provinces, was attended by no less than half-a-million pilgrims, all of whom paid fees, on the understanding that the Brahmin municipal authorities should provide proper sanitary arrangements and conveniences for the multitude. The money was duly paid, but the other conditions of the contract remained a dead letter.

To have once or twice a week a trifling present such as fruit, vegetables, sweetmeats, a lamb, or a duck is very nice, but to have to give the servant who bears the articles a douceur of one pound on each occasion renders the attention somewhat costly. Such, however, is the custom of Mashhad.

The ball given by Calcutta Society to their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught resulted in a net surplus of Rs.2,780. This is a new way of combining charity and pleasure.

Mrs AWABA MERWANJEE BHOWNUGREE, sister to the agent in this country of His Highness the Thakore Saheb of Bownuggur, has creditably passed an examination in English and other subjects at Cambridge. Bravo for Parsi ability and pluck!

ADVERTISING is an art carried in America to the highest pitch. Here is an example. Colonel Ingersoll, a free thinking lecturer, being about to visit Europe, the circumstance is notified in a New York paper in the following quaint, but striking terms:—"We feel a bit sorry for Europe. Bob Ingersoll is going there for a three years' visit, during which he will bring to public attention the coolness which exists between him and his Maker. Terms two shillings per head, and no half-price."

SMALL-POX can be conveyed in a letter; it may be hoped the "dynamiters" will not turn their attention to this new mode of murdering the hated Saxon.

The Verandah of the Public Works Department, Madras, has been graced with a swarm of bees, which constructed therein a large honeycomb; but the Natives, always ready to attach an omen to the most insignificant circumstance, are in great alarm, fearing a reduction in the department.

COORG has been relieving the monotony of existence with amateur theatricals. The pieces chosen were Naval Engagements and The Rosebud of Stinging-nettle Farm. In the former a retired admiral loses his head to a girl twenty-five years his junior, while a gay young lieutenant is caught by a lady old enough to be his mother. In the next piece the "balance" of propriety is restored by an admiral falling in love with his son's fiancée, while the lieutenant, not to be outdone, does ditto as regards the fair lady who had captivated his father, the Admiral. What a jumble ! It may well be imagined that there was a wide scope for drollery and fun.

GRAND words are the order of the day. Four men were killed in Bombay from "sewer gas." The announcement runs that their death was due to "mephitic" gas. Who, save experts, ever heard of such a concoction ?

INDIA has invented a new danger. At Ooty a philanthropic Christian walks about with a huge mastiff, which every now and then makes a friendly grip at the hand of a passer-by. This is bad enough ; but fancy taking such a huge malicious beast to the public recreation grounds, and introducing him to the children assembled there for amusement ! This is criminal.

GOOD news for the "notoriety mongers" of London society. A Burmese Mission is expected in the metropolis during the course of next September ; but no one will then be here to receive them, unless some enterprising lady remains in the dull season on purpose to catch such distinguished visitors.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

RUSSIA IN CENTRAL ASIA.*

Though "the uproar is over," though what our own Radical journals call the "Russian scare," and what the Russian newspapers call "the English submission," is, alas ! a thing of the past, we advert to it once more, to call the attention of our readers to sources whence they can obtain a knowledge of the state of affairs which will exist when England shall, as we hope, have been roused, probably by further Muscovite advances, to appreciate—as must sooner or later be the case—the importance of the matter which has been at issue between our Government and that of the Great White Tsar, and when the present hollow truce shall have come to an end—the sooner the better in our opinion, and in that of any and every unbiassed Anglo Indian.

Mr. Marvin's title page is startling enough, showing, as it does, that while the Russians have got in hand a railway to within 100 miles of Herat, our sanctioned railway to Pishin would still leave us 469 miles (say seven weeks' march) to arrive there, were it even completed, which is known to be impossible till the close of 1886, not to speak of the absence of a bridge at Sukkur, and the break of gauge at or near Rindli.

Opportunately Mr. Marvin calls to mind the well-known saying of the Emperor Nicholas, that distance was his greatest enemy ; and shows us how, through the steady perseverance of the Russians, and the supineness—to call it by no worse name—of the Gladstone Cabinet, this enemy will henceforth be ours, not Russia's. Had the Candahar Railway been even partially finished, instead of being destroyed in obedience to a mean spite of which a child might have been ashamed, English produce and English gold would have been flowing into Afghanistan ; and even the two or three years of commerce which would have elapsed since Disraeli's statesmanlike conception could have been realised would have familiarised the Afghans with the idea that their most lucrative trade would be, as it has ever been, not with the inhabitants of the wilds of Turkestan, but with the possessors of the unbounded wealth of India.

The key to the position is, of course, the priority of arrival at Herat. This is so self-evident that we shall not waste words or space in proving it. How we have thrown away all chance of priority Mr. Marvin has no difficulty in showing. Many wise, and many more unwise, men, have had a place in the Council of the Viceroy of India, but it is rarely that an unwise man so cynically lays bare his unwisdom as did Sir Henry Norman, when asked, as Military Member of Council, to recommend (practically to sanction) the expenditure of no great amount to put the Commissariat into better order. "Wait till war breaks out, then see how we will shell out the money." Are these the words of a Counsellor ? In one Counsellor there is much unwisdom ! The sentiment is, however, worthy of a man who could say that "the probability of our having to struggle for Herat, or to defend India from Candahar, is so remote, that its possibility is hardly worth considering."

Mr. Marvin's brochure calls attention to many facts which it is too much the fashion to ignore, and may be cordially recommended as a succinct statement of the case, England versus Russia.

"Even," says the "Indian Officer," whose little pamphlet stands next on our list, "if the resources of the Empire be strained to the utmost, we should for once place ourselves in a position to make it clear to Russia that the instinct of self-preservation at last constrains us to take up by force of arms a question which her knavery and duplicity has placed it beyond the power of diplomacy to settle. Our present attitude of compromise and surrender is indeed a comment on, and will enable the Ameer to appraise the value of, the complete reassurances with which we find it so easy to be generous." This is the motive of his "Russian Ethnography," and we need hardly express our cordial agreement with his conclusion.

The very well-written paper which Mr. Stanhope has contributed to this month's National Review, though primarily dealing with the late disgraceful "surrender," and its consequences, of necessity travels, to a great extent, over the same ground, and from the same point of view. Indeed, it is remarkable how everyone who has the least knowledge of the subject, and the most ordinary common sense, inevitably does so. If one meets a person who professes to "know better," it is a tolerably safe wager that he will not be able to correct you if you tell him that Darjeeling is the capital of Sind, and is situated on the Hindoo Koo-h, close to Ootacamund.

We owe Mr. Stanhope a real debt of gratitude for recalling to mind the words of wisdom uttered by John Jacob more than thirty years ago. "Our policy hitherto," said that very able officer, after an unequalled experience on the frontier, "has been purely negative. . . We are ready enough to say what we will not do, but all efforts by any of the other Asiatic Powers concerned have failed to elicit from the Government, either here or in India, any declaration of what it will do under any given or conceivable combination of circumstances." Of course not ; the Government itself does not know ; it acts only pro re nata, to tide over some real, or imaginary, difficulty ; it will never grasp its nettle. Had it done so, would Russia have had Penjdeh, or even Sarakhs ?

In the North-East corner of the Bay of Bengal is a strip of land but little known to travellers, its jungles being well-nigh untraversed by European footsteps ; indeed, save as regards the few representatives of the British Government who are stationed in these wilds, a white face is seldom seen within the limits of Chittagong. It speaks highly for the resolution and courage of Dr. Riebeck that, unable to speak any language save his mother-tongue, German, he should venture in such "untamed" regions, not as a pleasure trip, but in the interests of the science of ethnology. The first essays were far from encouraging : the cholera was prevalent in the country, and no persuasion could induce an interpreter to brave the anger of the demon whom superstition supposed to preside over this particular form of disease. When, alas ! the scruples of one particular native were at length overcome, he "disappeared for good with all his earnest-money before the start." Obviously he had no scruples. Nothing daunted, the traveller and his party determined to dispense with the luxury of an interpreter, and like a "cripple without his crutch" quitted Calcutta on one of the British India Steam Navigation Company's vessels, arriving at Chittagong on 20th February, in the year of grace 1882. It chanced to be a Sunday, and, to quote the quaint language of the diary, "The whole place, English and Natives, were keeping the Sabbath. Amongst the blessings of European civilisation the English Sunday, with its complete suspension of business, here enjoys the highest degree of popularity, so that we found it impossible to obtain any assistance on landing." Not being able to communicate their wishes and intentions to those around them, the little party were not unnaturally subjected to "a week of endless 'plagues and worries ;'" they were "overreached in the pettiest transactions," and their "complaints were usually followed by an adverse decision, although we were unconscious of any unfairness on our part"—a result which is laid at the door of the English officials, "who seem to be held in little respect by the natives ;" it is satisfactory, however, to find that "social amenities" on the part of the latter indemnified the brave Tentons for the failure of magisterial "support." At length, however, all arrangements were complete, and by a chance, "little short of a miracle," they started on a small paddle steamer up the river, and their task commenced. Arriving at Rangamati, they were hospitably received by the Deputy Commissioner, Mr. L. R. Forbes, whose mode of life gave rise to a reflection on the part of his guests that "here, as all the world over, the English live after the English fashion, the old homely ways clinging to them like the very soles of their feet. They eat more curry, more rice, more poultry than in England ; but in other respects they eat, drink, and play lawn tennis, just as if residing within a few hours of London." Fate had decreed that just at this time a body of soldiers were about to start on a reconnoitring expedition, and it was suggested that Dr. Riebeck and his companions should join the party. The arrangement proved an excellent one for the travellers, who meanwhile availed themselves of the opportunity of a few days' rest to purchase articles of curiosity from the half-starved natives, at that time suffering from a wide-spread dearth. "It's an ill wind that blows no good," and history records that "in the famine I recognised my best ally in my intended barterings." Another interpreter was engaged as before, but equally as before he decamped on the eve of starting; so it was necessary to trust to the chapter of accidents. Quitting the steamer, they now transferred themselves and their baggage to native boats made from the trunks of trees, the chief cause of complaint being "the frightful stench of the bilge water." Well supplied with rice, the enterprising savant was enabled to obtain many an article which nothing but the pains of hunger would have induced its owner to sell—a success which is somewhat laughably described as due "to the exceptionally favourable relations prevalent at the time." The curiosity of the natives in regard to "white skins" now became embarrassing, for seeing the worthy doctor at his ablutions the astounded lookers-on could not restrain their curiosity, and even went so far as to tear off his shirt "in order to subject his body to a more searching scrutiny."

The chief subject which attracted the notice of the worthy man of science was that men and women looked exactly alike wearing similar garments. Thoroughly embarrassed, the worthy man of science writes, in tones of despair, "The question in what they are outwardly distinguished might form a suitable subject for an ethnological prize essay." The answer is whimsical: their pipes are the solitary feature wherein the sexes differ—they all, young men and maidens, old men and children, "smoke like furnaces," but male pipes are made of wood, while female calumets are fashioned from clay. The costume of the children is nil; they frolic about and gambol in Nature's garb. But the famine raged sore in the land—men would not, perhaps could not, work. "Masterly inactivity at any cost" was the order of the day, and had it not been for an English officer, by name Parish, whose efforts were aided by a certain "polyglott" sergeant and a "brandy flask," the excursion would have ended in a fiasco. The officer inspired respect, the sergeant knew the language and was experienced in dealing with natives, while the brandy—composed for the occasion of spirits of wine diluted with water and coloured with burnt sugar—allured their uneducated palate. So the purchase of ethnological specimens progressed satisfactorily. Photographs were taken, and a valuable collection soon passed into the possession of the enterprising traveller, who, plying the chief liberally with "fire-water," was enabled thereby to add to the list several curious and valuable articles, including, amongst others, the insignia of that worthy potentate's rank. The return journey began badly: one orderly proved a thief, another a drunkard. The latter circumstance will not probably occasion much surprise—he had learned well the lesson the doctor had taught him. However, all ended satisfactory, and they reached Chittagong safe and sound. Emboldened by the results of their first venture, they determined to start on a second excursion inland. Securing the services of a cook and man-servant, they soon found that the former had many times been imprisoned for theft, and he now began to "live up" to his former career. So he was relegated to obscurity. This done, off they started. As on the previous journey, so on this occasion, the "brandy-bottle" proved a veritable "pioneer of commerce." One person, and one alone, proved inaccessible to its charms—the wife of a "grey-beard." This virago, finding her venerable spouse about to part with a coverlet which she had worked for her child, flew like a tigress at her lord and master, and by brute force convinced him rather than by reason that commerce was not his line. Much was seen, much was done, during the journey, but an unfortunate attack of jungle fever prostrated the worthy doctor, who, more dead than alive, crawled back to headquarters.

The results of his wanderings Dr. Riebeck has embodied in the work under review, which teems with the most beautiful plates and diagrams. It is veritably—although it is not so described—an édition de luxe; and were the exterior binding in any way commensurate with the splendour of the internal decoration, the volume might well serve as an adornment to the salon, while as an addition to the library, abounding as it does with ethnological, anthropological, zoological, and meteorological information, it cannot fail to be alike appreciated by the savant and consulted by the student.

KASHMIR.

CRADLED among mountains, which encircle it as though Nature could not allow so precious a jewel to lack an appropriate setting, lies the lovely valley of Kashmir. Though small in extent—the entire State contains but 79,784 square miles, with a population of one and a half millions—it is to be ranked among the most naturally fertile spots on the earth. Mesopotamia, and the Punjab, have been named as the probable sites of the garden of Eden; and even the rivers verified. But, if the real Eden has, as is likely enough, been covered by sand, and is no longer Eden, a fairer counterfeit of it than Kashmir could not well be found. It is a real Paradise.

It is not, however, with the beauty of the Happy Valley that we are now concerned. In times when we feel, like David of old, that we have to “prove” our armour, before encountering our Goliath, “the Divine Figure from the North,” we must “assay” it, and be assured that its every joint is duly attached to the corslet, on the strength of which it, after all, depends. Now, such a joint in the armour of British India, and a most important one, is Kashmir.

What Kashmir once was, any reader of Keene's, or any other good, “History of Hindustan,” can easily see. The sense in which we call Kent, or Devonshire, the garden of England, fails to give anything like an equivalent to what Kashmir is to the North-West of India. What Kashmir has been, since we have had anything to do with it, is not to be contemplated without bringing a blush of shame to every Englishman's cheek.

When we defeated the Punjab army, the Khalsa, as it was called, and annexed the Punjab, Kashmir, as a portion of the dominions of Ranjit Sing, came into our possession. We happened to be “impecunious.” We sold the province to Golab Sing, the greatest extortioner, perhaps, of his time, for a crore of rupees, subject to payment, as nominal tribute, of a certain number of shawls yearly. These are pretty regularly sent to Windsor, and figure as the gifts presented by the Queen to favoured brides. But who pays for them? It is notorious that the unhappy weavers work at the rate of about 1d. a-day. Such is the grinding taxation, that the revenue has fallen, since we transferred the Province, by nearly two-thirds. In any other country this would have caused a storm in a tea-cup—what in Europe would be called a revolution. But the Kashmiri is an easy-going individual. He may, like the cabman, “think a deuce of a lot,” but he gives no practical effect to his thoughts.

Nevertheless, the entire population is in a state of subacute discontent; and the present Ruler is safe only because his subjects are too timid to rebel; no one will make the first move.

Premising these very imperfect remarks as to the present state of the country, let us consider how its position, the will of its Ruler, or the discontent of its people, may affect us in case of a threatened Russian invasion.

Its position is one the importance of which it is difficult to overrate. From the new Russian frontier to Peshawar or Kashmir the distance, as the crow flies, is much less than that from the Caspian to Herat, and barely half that from Herat to the Indus; of the mountainous region, which separates the basins of the Jaxartes and the Indus, a region, till recently, quite unexplored, Russia has managed to “assimilate” Farghana, the only really fertile and valuable part. Farghana alone, properly cultivated, would provide all the commissariat wants of a fairly large army.

Chitral, acknowledging a very dubious allegiance to Kashmir, lies almost within the grasp of an enterprising Russian General. It is true that the country is difficult. The Alps are not sandhills, but they have been traversed by armies over and over again. Nor is there any impossibility in an army crossing the passes which lead from Farghana to Kashmir. On ne fait pas des omelettes sans casser des œufs. If the Russians are willing to sacrifice the lives of a sufficient number of men, we see no reason why they should not cross one or more of the passes enumerated in Dr. Hunter's Gazeteer, and easily make something more than a “diversion” or a feint from the Chitral side, even though their main attack might be from a more southerly quarter. Karategin, Darwaza, and Roshan, are admitted, even by the officiously optimistic Pioneer, to be at Russia's mercy whenever she likes to take them.

Let anyone look at any decent map of Asia, and see what this means. Yet we are absolutely ignorant of the real frontiers of a country which we sold. What finer chance for the Russians? We need only repeat the Penjdeh performance to have them on us in Kashmir as in Afghanistan. We are only just commencing to “delimitate” the boundaries of a province which is not, like Afghanistan, independent, but which is avowedly a part—and, let us again say, a very important part—of British India. It is only within the last month that “a British mission is being sent to Kashmir, in charge of Colonel Lockhart. The chief object of the mission is to obtain further geographical information concerning the countries on the northern and western frontiers of Kashmir. It will visit Chitral and the neighbourhood of that place, and will be absent for several months.” Yet it is thirty-five years since we sold the province. Political foresight, truly! Let anyone ask Mr. Cross, the Under-Secretary for India, who is usually candid enough to confess his ignorance, for an exact definition of the northern boundaries of Kashmir.

Now, here we have no real difficulty to encounter except one of our own creation. During more than the third of a century have we allowed the existence of this standing danger, at one time far more easily removable than is now the case, when intrigue with every Native State on our northern frontier, or situate within our dominions, is the Russian mot d'ordre. We have not seen sufficient notice in the Press of this very important matter, and think it but right to call attention to it.

While recommending to our Indian Government, in the strongest terms, vigilance as to Russian proceedings on the side of Kashmir, we do not mean to indicate that it is from that quarter that a direct attack, feasible as we have shown it to be, is to be expected. On the contrary, the object will be (to use an Americanism) to "establish a raw." We are inclined to agree with our Indian contemporary that we may fairly expect small bodies of Usbeg cavalry under adventurous Russian officers to be sent in the summer to Shighnan and Wakhan to excite the tribes, who are probably not intensely devoted to their Afghan masters, to turn them out—no difficult matter—and proclaim their adhesion to the White Tsar. The same game may probably be played on a larger scale in Badakshan, whence not a few chiefs have gone on that journey to Kabul from which so few return. The road will then lie open to Chitral and the neighbouring countries dependent on Kashmir, where, of course, the same process of intriguing for "adhesion to the White Tsar" will be followed up. Meanwhile are we to be quiescent, and play into the hands of the Muscovite? Unquestionably we ought to have a Resident throughout the year in a much more central position than Leh. It is not because the passes are closed that intrigues do not go on, and a representative of the British Government should be lit rally auprès the Maharaja, no matter what the season. A competent officer—and our Indian services are rich in such—ought to have no difficulty in making his presence a boon, rather than a nuisance, even to a far more bigoted and exclusive Ruler than the Maharaja of Kashmir.

OBITUARY.

WE ought not to pass over without notice—if only on account of his relationship to our Royal family—the demise of the Red Prince, Frederic Charles of Prussia. Every member of the Prussian Royal family learns a "trade," to provide against the possibility of his being left destitute, were the dynasty to be driven from the throne. We believe the late Prince was a shoemaker. But all the princes are, en attendant the time when they may be destitués, entered, as is every Prussian subject, on the effective list of the army. So was it with Frederic Charles, and he proved himself a worthy scion of a gallant family. He first won his spurs in Schleswig, being then a youngster of nineteen; but showing, even at that early age, remarkable military intuition, not that much credit was to be got out of shooting down a few hundred Danes, who had only muzzle-loading muskets to oppose to the needle-guns of their enemies; nevertheless, the Prince showed an unusual grasp of the exact military position, which did not fail to attract the attention of old Wangel, the Commander-in-Chief. From that period his career was that of a General in time of peace. In 1870, after four years' repose, the Red Prince found himself, early in August, face to face with the bulk of the French army, under Bazaine. The three desperate battles, variously named, of the 14th, 16th, and 18th of August followed; and the French, who had at one time all but snatched the victory from their enemies, were shut up in Metz. A hundred thousand men were put hors de combat in those three furious struggles at Vionville, Mars-la-Tour (or Gravelotte), and St. Privat. The surrender of Bazaine, with three Field Marshals, generals without number, and 170,000 men, led the Emperor of Germany, then King of Prussia, to confer on the Prince the rank of Field-Marshal. Perhaps the Red Prince's most brilliant exploits took place after the surrender of Metz. Strategically, they are universally admitted to have shown exceptional military ability. After the termination of the French war, the Prince led a comparatively retired life, never forgetting that he was a soldier quand même, and rejoicing especially in the society of military men. His death, before his daughter, the Duchess of Connaught—the wife, as well as the daughter, of a soldier—had the opportunity of seeing him on her return from India, will be regretted, not by the Royal family alone.

MANY of our readers who never met, will, by name at least, remember the dashing, cavalry leader who led a splendid regiment (extemporized by himself) to China, where it was always known as Fane's Horse. A member of the Madras Army, which has furnished to the service an exceptional number of officers distinguished in political and in semi-political work, Fane entered the army in 1845, and obtained a lieutenancy in 1853. He served in the Punjab Irregular Cavalry from 1849 to 1857, and was present in several engagements against the hill tribes on the North-West Frontier. He also took part in the pursuit and final capture of Tantia Topee in Central India, in 1859. The gallant officer was promoted to a captaincy in 1860, became major in 1861, lieutenant-colonel in 1869, and colonel in 1875. He raised a regiment of irregular cavalry for service in China, and was present at the taking of the Peiho forts. He also commanded "Fane's Horse" in the engagement of Sinho, and in the actions of Chinkiawhaw and Pulli-chi-on, and the capture of Peking. For these services he was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath. He was promoted to the rank of major general in 1879. General Fane, who was a kinsman of the Earl of Westmoreland, married, in 1879, Agnes, daughter of Sir Henry Bold Houghton.

WHAT is there which the Chinese do not claim to have invented? We should have thought ourselves safe in naming the telephone. But no:—

At a recent meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society in Shanghai, a paper by Dr. Macgowan was read on the early use of telephones in China. It detracts nothing from the merit of the ingenious physicists who have conferred on mankind the boon of the telephone that its principles are familiar to uncivilised peoples, several of whom are in possession of rudimentary telephones. It was, we opine, when the Chinese were in their youth that they constructed the rudimentary instrument. It consists of two bamboo cylinders, one and a half to two inches in diameter, and four in length; one end of each is closed by a tympanum of pig bladder, which is perforated for the transmitting string, the string kept in place by being knotted. This rude instrument is styled the "listening tubes," and is employed for amusement as a toy, conveying whispers forty or fifty feet. Besides this toy Chinese ingenuity produced, about a century and a half ago, the "thousand mile speaker." The implement is described as "a roll of copper, likened to a fire, containing an artful device; whispered into and immediately closed, the confined message, however long, may be conveyed to any distance; and thus in a battle secret instructions may be conveniently communicated. It is a contrivance of extraordinary merit." The inventor of the "thousand mile speaker," Chiang Shuncsin, of Huichou, flourished during the reign of Kang-hsi, A.D. 1662-1772. He wrote on occult science, astronomy, &c. The above account of his invention was taken from his works by the author of a Fukien Miscellany.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 30, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, June 9th; Madras and Allahabad, June 7th; Calcutta, June 7th; Ceylon, 6th.

THE Ministry (of which its chief (Lord Salisbury), Sir S. Northcote, and Lord Randolph Churchill, seem, by common consent, to be thought the most prominent members,) having at length been constituted, it is interesting to know what is thought of it in India and abroad. The air is full of rumours as regards the influence of the change on the negotiations (which ought never to have been begun) with Russia.

THE Indian papers are naturally most concerned with the new Indian Secretary. The Anglo-Indian Press, except the Pioneer, which expects Lord Dufferin's resignation as a necessary consequence of his appointment, and the Madras Mail, which anticipates endless danger from Lord R. Churchill's inexperience, warmly approve the selection. The native journals, though not unanimously, "either approve the appointment, or are content to wait and judge by results."

Thus the Hindoo Patriot says:—"Lord R. Churchill is never likely to prove imperious at the first start, or to trip in a hurry, seeing that he has studied statecraft for fifteen years and has ample experience of Parliamentary life."

The Indian Spectator, a Bombay journal, looks upon the appointment as a prize for India, inasmuch as Lord R. Churchill has seen India with his own eyes, and has heard her grievances with his own ears. It is not blind to his failings, but it considers them such as will yield to the sense of responsibility.

The Bombay Chronicle expects much from the honest, open nature of the young nobleman, and hopes that he will prove a good friend to the people of this country.

Native Opinion, another Bombay newspaper, judging from the impressions produced here during his Lordship's recent visit, says that much may be expected from him when actually in harness.

FEW, if any, of the German papers, are prepared to disapprove the change of Administration. Most of them seem inclined not only to hail it, but to agree with the Vossische, which thinks that the Conservative Cabinet cannot help showing well in foreign affairs against the dark background of Mr. Gladstone's failures.

"ON the whole," says the Times Berlin correspondent, "the welcome of the German Press to the new Ministry may be called cordial, and it is satisfactory to see that this feeling is shared in by the organs of every shade of political opinion."

THE comments of the French papers are suggestive. Everyone for himself. France is solely occupied with Egypt:—

The Royalist Français thinks that Gladstonian indecision in Egypt is at an end. The Débats argues that the friendliness which existed between France and the Beaconsfield Cabinet may be revived. Though circumstances have altered and the solutions cannot be the same, the old spirit may be restored. If Sir H. Wolff supersede Sir E. Baring it cannot be a change for the worse. It cannot, moreover, be Prince Bismarck's policy, or interest, to shirk his engagements and to turn round in favour of England, especially as the result of the English elections is very doubtful. The Débats concludes by pointing out to Lord Salisbury an easy way of making things smooth, by avoiding Lord Granville's dictatorial airs, by entering the concert of the European Powers, and by not trying to win over any one Power to himself.

THE Official Political News of Berlin pretty accurately expresses the general opinion of the Continent, so far as it has yet been formed, as to our change of Ministry (we do not, of course, speak of the French Press, which is usually the antipodes of the German) in the extract which we excerpt from last Saturday's Times. The estimate, by an outsider—outsiders proverbially see most of the game—of the late Premier's habitually crooked ways may not be pleasing to a nation which has let him misguide its "policy" for five years, but its truth cannot be doubted:—

The English Ministerial crisis has now been ended by the accession to office of a Conservative Cabinet. The question now is, whether or not Lord Salisbury will be able to govern the State according to the principles of the Conservative party. If the Conservatives had a majority in the Lower House, an affirmative answer to this question would be a matter of course. The existing majority, however, is Liberal, and has in Mr. Gladstone an ambitious and not very scrupulous leader, who has given the Conservative Premier nothing but assurances of the most general character, which may be turned and twisted in any direction as soon as it pleases Mr. Gladstone to pick a parliamentary quarrel with the Conservatives.

The compromise between him and Lord Salisbury, if, indeed, the indefinite declarations of Mr. Gladstone have any claim to this name, would, therefore, be of very doubtful value if the new Cabinet had any intention of prosecuting an independent policy. Mr. Gladstone and his party cannot, for the sake of their own prestige, allow the Conservative party to secure a definite and real success. Lord Salisbury can only count upon the neutrality of his political rivals so long as he does not arouse their suspicions.

RUSSIA, of course, begins with bluster and a suggestio falsi. Lords Salisbury and Randolph Churchill are to apologise to Holy Russia for what they said of its Government! Shade of Beaconsfield! "I have," says the St. Petersburg correspondent of the pro-Russian Daily News, "good authority for stating that at the Foreign Office in St. Petersburg some spontaneous explanation is expected of the offensive language used so recently by two leading members of the present Administration in connection with the very negotiations which they have now to bring to a termination. Should this expectation of the Russian Government remain unrealised, I am informed that the effect would soon become apparent in the further course of the Anglo-Russian negotiations, which would then indeed run some danger of being greatly delayed, if not of failing entirely. This result would be highly deplorable after the late Cabinet had so nearly completed an agreement equally honourable to both sides."

Now for the suggestio falsi, that even the late Cabinet proposed to divide Afghanistan with Russia. (Be it borne in mind that every Russian paper is "inspired," or, which is much the same, writes only what will be approved.) The Moscow Viedomosti has an article on a project for the division of Afghanistan between England and Russia. It has the cool assurance to insinuate that England is secretly carrying on an agitation with this object in view, and gravely says that Russia must energetically oppose it, as such a division would be advantageous only to England. Russia has her own interests to look after, which are of the highest importance. Would England, this paper asks, be disposed to take those interests into account if Russia eventually accepted her partition proposals? When the writer talks about Russia's interests he probably means simply Russia's longing to reach the sea.

LITTLE news reaches us regarding the disturbances in Bhootan, but it is reported that the Rajah is hard pressed by the insurgents, being besieged in his capital, Poonakka. He is said to have applied to the Indian Government for arms and ammunition, but without success.

REUTER informs us that it is reported from Cabul that Ishak Khan, aided by his Russian allies, has risen in insurrection against Abdullah Khan. Ishak Khan has gone to Khanabad, and has seized an immense amount of treasure, valued at one million sterling, belonging to the Ameer of Afghanistan. Khanabad lies about fifty miles south of the Oxus, which river divides Afghan Turkestan from the Russian-protected State of Bokhara. Khanabad was the headquarters of the present Ameer before he was summoned to the throne of Afghanistan, and the negotiations between him and the British officers were carried on there.

THIS Russian "fermentation," or something like it, we have more than once noticed as probable. The northern frontier of Afghanistan is at least as vulnerable as the western; and no one knows what forces the Russians may have in Samarcand. The Government of India has not the news. Not yet. Nor has St. Petersburg. Of course not! Who so unlikely to "get up a row?" Most innocent people!

WE regret to say, too, that the political health of Kashgaria is "not all that her best friends could wish." She is clearly the next subject for "fomentation." We read—still in Reuter:—

The political difficulties in Kashgaria are becoming serious. Reinforcements are being sent northwards.

We hope our new Government will keep its weather-eye open, remembering that the Russians are "deep, Sir, deep, and devilish shy."

POSTAL FACILITIES.—Our readers will be glad to hear that we are at length to have a parcel post to India and its dependencies, including British Burmah. From the 1st July parcels can be sent (under conditions, the particulars of which every post office can furnish) at the rate of one shilling per pound up to seven pounds. It is also satisfactory to be informed that Londoners can henceforth post their letters an hour later. Why in London, which, of all cities in the world, posts most letters in the day, this should not long since have been done, passes comprehension.

WE are very pleased to see that Siam has agreed to join the Postal Union. Our Siamese subscribers are not the only folk who will be benefited. Siam is really one of the most enlightened States, so far as administration is concerned, of Further India; and, considering the French advances in Tonquin and Anam, it has always seemed to us that we have been remiss in making ourselves "a Power in the State" at its capital, Bangkok. We have had some highly respectable persons as our representatives there. But, with so preponderant a proportion of the external commerce of the country, we ought to have far greater influence in the councils of the State than our Consuls-General have ever managed to secure for us. Unless we intend to allow our commerce to be gradually extruded from Further India, it will be well to "push" our influence in Siam.

IN raising Lord Randolph Churchill, per saltum, to the Indian Secretaryship, Lord Salisbury has doubtless been mindful of his own success when, as Lord Cranborne, he was, though an untried man, appointed to the same post, now even more arduous than it then was. It is pleasing to see that the appointment of Lord Randolph Churchill has, on the whole, been well received in India. Lord Randolph has made his mark as an incisive speaker; indeed, he is one of the few whom Mr. Gladstone cares to answer in person; and we hope that he may make his mark, as several of Beaconsfield's young men have done, as a Cabinet minister. The Indian Secretaryship bids fair to be one of the most difficult positions in any future Government. Lord Randolph will not lack materials for arriving at sound conclusions if he will consult his councillors.

It is stated that the Under-Secretary for India will be Lord Harris, the son of a former Governor of Madras, and grandson of "Seringapatam" Harris. Lord Harris has hitherto never held office, but is well known in the cricket-field, his popularity in which augurs well for his success in his new sphere. He was born in 1851.

THE New Indian Secretary has, we understand, chosen for his private secretary Mr. A. W. Moore, who retired but the other day from the post of Political Assistant Secretary in the India Office. Mr. Moore has an hereditary interest in Indian affairs, as the son of Major J. A. Moore, of the Hyderabad Cavalry, a director of old John Company; and his own long experience as Council Clerk and as Assistant Secretary will be useful to his chief.

"COMING EVENTS." Some of the Afghans defeated on the Kushk have, according to the Kavhas, shown themselves at Meshed, and are "profoundly convinced of the superiority of the Russian arms over English troops, and the futility of any further resistance to the forces of the White Tzar."

THE native papers continue to refer to the Native Volunteering question. Witness the following extracts. The Nababibhakur writes:—

We hear that Lord Dufferin personally is not opposed to the natives to be enrolled as volunteers. His Excellency, we are told, is sincerely glad to see the natives so much willing to serve the Government. But he cannot take any step in the matter without consulting his Council. We cannot say whether or not the old Anglo-Indian members of the Viceregal Council will support the Viceroy. We pray that God will give them good understanding.

THE Bangabasi is much less hopeful, at least as regards the Bengalees:—

It seems, after all, says this paper, possible that our Baboos will be able to be volunteers. The report says that the Bara Lat is not opposed to allow them to be enrolled as volunteers. If his Excellency's Councillors support him, we shall soon see our Baboos winning military glory by defending the gates and the backdoors of their own houses. We would not oppose the native gentlemen in satisfying their wish, but in this connection we would beg to direct the attention of the public to the enervated condition of the mass of the population. It is well for the country that Bengalees have no freedom to enter the police service or the higher ranks of the military service. Our leading men are trying much to obtain the privilege of being enrolled as volunteers; but to get privilege of greater work, they do not make any very great effort.

HERE is a sensible idea sensibly carried out. The Civil and Military Gazette says:—

The State railways are to be congratulated on having an enterprising chief. In communication with the Messageries Steamship Company, that officer has arranged a substantial concession for all employés of the Indian State railways proceeding to Europe, in the shape of a reduction of 20 per cent., on 1st and 2nd class fares, in the case of all members of the staff, their wives and families, without exception; whether employed on open lines or those under survey or construction. The concession reduces the rates to Rs. 504 by 1st class for Naples or Marseilles, or Rs. 403 by 2nd class, including all transit charges through the canal, and wine. The railway employés are a numerous body, and it is probably worth the Messageries Company's while to offer a considerable reduction to secure their patronage. But why should not other departments of the State attempt similar arrangements with this or rival companies? The Post Office, Telegraph, Public Works, even the Punjab Commission, all numerous bodies, might advertise for tenders, putting up their patronage to the company offering the greatest reduction. We commend the hint to the heads of departments.

THE journals connected with the late Ministry accustomed, like their masters, to hint the thing which is not, but which they dare not openly affirm, now tell us, as an excuse for the cowardly abandonment of the Soudan, that the Mahdi had collapsed, ceased to be a personage of any importance, &c. It was as true as the pretences on which the eleven millions were got, and much of what Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues have said. How true the subjoined report may inform us. Colonel Ross is a man of sufficiently clear intellect to "see an inch or two beyond the doorway." The Times correspondent says:—

Colonel Ross, the Political Officer in the Persian Gulf, reports that numerous copies of a proclamation in the name of the Mahdi have been brought through Arabia to the shores of the Gulf, and have attracted much attention. The wording of some of these shadow forth the purpose of the Mahdi to lead his followers to the conquest of Egypt and Arabia.

Colonel Ross considers that in the latter country the Mahdi, if successful, would have the support of large numbers of the population. He thinks that the sympathy of the people is at present more political than religious, although the element of religious fervour is not wanting.

THE very well informed Iron and Coal Trades Review tells us that the Russians have not only "struck ile," as the Americans say, but also found coal, near Batoum. Where petroleum is the presence of coal, at no very great distance, is never unlikely. As we mentioned in a recent number, the locomotives on the Transcaspian Railway are mostly constructed to consume coal as well as oil. The Review tells us:—

The Russian journals speak of great activity in the Transcaucasian coalfield. The mines of Triboul will be connected with the Batoum branch of the Transcaucasian Railway, and an output of 40,000 tons is counted upon for this year.

THE same journal calls our attention to a significant announcement in the Russian Svet, whose name (war) indicates its warlike proclivities. The relations, "commercial" or other, of Russia to Persia are always au fond strategic, and cannot be too carefully watched:—

PROPOSED RUSSIAN RAILWAY TO TEHERAN.—The Svet states that General Annenkoff has surveyed the route of the projected Trans-Caspian Railway, and that he will arrive at St. Petersburg at the end of the present month in order to assist in the final elaboration of plans. The Caucasian authorities support the proposals of the shareholders of the Trans-Caucasian Railway for the construction of a line between Tiflis and Teheran.

WE were told that, on the conclusion of the Staal-Lessar-Granville "conference," Lessar was to proceed to delimitate "the debateable land," to demarcate it in conjunction with Colonel Ridgeway. Yet Lessar is here, talking conventionalities and platitudes at Burlington House. The Russians "mean business" as little as they ever meant to send a commissioner to meet Lumsden. Will our new Government put a stop to this double-dyed "humbug?" Meanwhile—and this demands attention—we read that, as Sir P. Lumsden, Colonel Stewart, and Mr. Condie Stephen, have "repaired to the metropolis" by "superior order," Colonel Ridgeway is the only remaining member of the delimitation Commission. What if he were taken ill, or if he were to be poisoned at Russian instigation? Does the "sacred covenant"—no, we beg pardon, this is not the "sacred" covenant, so cynically broken, but one not "sacred," and, therefore, even less necessary to be observed—provide that, in such a case, Lessar is not to have it all his own way? We trow not. Such prevision would have been too much to expect of Earl Granville. Does Colonel Ridgeway even possess a copy of the agreement arrived at? We doubt it. Depend on it that Lessar has one; probably enough not an accurate one. Look to these things, Lord Randolph! Be assured that you must "get up early in the morning" to cope with the wiles and lies of Russian diplomacy.

EVEN, says an Indian contemporary, if there be some mistake in the statement of the Daily News that Russia has decided to appoint a diplomatic agent in Calcutta, yet there may be something in the announcement deserving the quiet but efficient attention of the chiefs of the secret police of the Government of India. That Government has a secret police of proved skill and ability. But still there are just now in India many foreigners whom it might be well to watch. In Calcutta Russian is openly taught, and there is a respectable demand for Russian primers, grammars, and books of a similar sort. A good many of the foreigners are men of good social standing, who profess to be sportsmen or travellers; these have letters of introduction to high Indian officials, and all have a perfect mania for Forbes' Hindustani manuals. Further, they all seem to find their way to Central India or to Rajputana, where, no doubt, they hope to find the peculiar game they have come to India to hunt. These travellers are not always persons who have the entrée into society. Occasionally they are of very inferior grades of life, and even of the weaker sex, and also of ages which would negative the supposition that they come to India as students. They are somewhat numerous, and it may just be that they may want some kind of official shelter to watch over them, and to serve as a channel for their communications. But they will find that in India there are no capitulations to save them from detection as in the Balkan countries, and that the Government of India is a despotism with very large powers over the individual where the public safety is concerned. They may be left, therefore, to the certain vigilance of those whose business it is to look after just such interesting visitors.

THE Statistical Society will doubtless make it one of their subjects for inquiry what percentage of Civil Servants, on first arrival at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay respectively (a) have ever crossed a horse, (b) what percentage of rides of (say) ten miles they have taken without being thrown.

Chit Chat.

THE Pioneer is very hard upon the Cabinet in regard to the incidence of the new taxation. "Peace with Eightpence" is the motto of the Budget. "Incomes, property, beer, and spirits are, according to the new thoroughgoing Radical party, all vices peculiar to the Tories, and these alone are taxed. Why not do the thing openly, it is asked, and whenever a Liberal Prime Minister makes 'preparations' for arbitration to the tune of eleven millions or so, levy a tax upon Conservatives?" The answer is, just because this would be "doing the thing openly."

AN enthusiastic Russophile in India has, through the columns of a newspaper, been endeavouring to induce the natives to "stand up" for the White Czar. "Russia means you no harm—does England mean all good to India?" Such is the language of this apostle of civilization. And, to the disgrace of literature, a place is given in an influential journal to this inflammatory nonsense. The example of the Pall Mall Gazette seems contagious.

IN Japan bicycles and tricycles are a trouble. So many accidents have occurred to pedestrians from the use of these machines that the Government has forbidden the use of them in the capital.

THE employés in the Public Service of the same country are in despair. An edict has recently been issued enjoining them all to appear in a certain style of dress so expensive that the purchase thereof consumes from two to three months' wages of the humbler members of the Governmental staff. What are they to do? Well may this be termed "reform upside down."

IF a house is infested with rats, pour chloride of lime down the drains. Not only will this act as a disinfectant and deodoriser, but not one of the pests will come near the house. What strange creatures to thrive on bad smells!

THE efforts of the Press to gain accurate and early information during war is both natural and laudable, but what must be the astonishment of the general in command when he learns for the first time, from a newspaper "special," that he has been surrounded by the enemy, and only saved by the heroic exertions of an heroic aide-de-camp! Yet this is but an exaggeration of what happens during every campaign. The "trifling inaccuracies" of the Press are a matter of comment and laughter, which serve to while away many an hour in the camp of the soldier on active service.

SO Volunteers from the sunny shores of Ind are to compete at Wimbledon this autumn. Bravo! Major Francis. Your pluck merits success.

THE new Game Laws in Kashmir provide, inter alia, that no females shall be killed; but in the name of all that is wonderful, how is such a rule to be carried out when one is about to fire? It is not always possible to tell whether the creature is a lord of creation or merely a humble wife of his bosom; and sportsmen must, too, be some what less impetuous than is their wont, if they can stop at the critical moment to work out a problem of sexes. What, too, if a female tiger makes herself obnoxious by giving one a friendly display of her teeth? But it has been forgotten an Englishman always has one never-failing resource—he can run away, and spare himself all pangs as to bloodguiltiness.

RUSSIA having succeeded by carefaced audacity in robbing Afghanistan of her territory is now preparing to pay a similar compliment to Persia by issuing maps planned on the suggestio falsi principle—or rather want of principle—so ere long the news will doubtless be proclaimed that the poor Shah-in-Shah is delighted to think that any of his poor lands are worth stealing. But no! Holy Russia never lies, never plunders, never deceives. Simple Simon England—her eyes are always turned up to Heaven.

THE Kidderpur Docks are, after all, not abandoned. The works are only stopped till Doomsday—in other words, till the money is forthcoming. To any ordinary mind the difference is not very apparent.

It is the custom for boatmen off the coast of Goa to murder their passengers when the inclination so to do is in the ascendant. A Portuguese paper suggests that it is "high time that passengers should have better protection from the cupidity of these villainous boatmen." What a strange mode of describing murder!

It has been left to India to discover what England has gained during the recent negotiation with Russia. Some Afghan books were found at Penjdeh—these have been presented to Captain Yate by General Alikhanoff. What a splendid return for something under eleven millions of money!

A DELHI paper is great in its abuse of Russia. The Muscovites are described as "fallow-brains"—that is certainly a mistake. "Gabies"—this is equally untrue. "Jobbernows"—this is incomprehensible. "Pumps"—this is, alas! too true; they have effectually "pumped" old England pretty dry. "Squatters"—good. "Natators," "wreakers," "yellers," and "yokels." How can it in future be solemnly said that "yet there are not three incomprehensibles"; here are four in a row offhand.

IN France, thanks to the light heartedness with which the nation regard the marriage vow, vitriol-throwing is becoming so general that persons are solicited by an enterprising advertiser to rub their faces with "collodion ointment"—a sure specific against injury!

GENERAL HOG, who has just returned from the Madras Army, bears the name "Thomas Ignatius Maria." He has taken his revenge upon his godfathers and godmothers by christening his son Roger Bacon Hog.

IN the Madras Roads a police flag was hoisted upon the steamship Avocet. It turned out that a passenger on board had insisted, time after time, upon walking on deck all night long, and throwing things at anyone he tumbled across in his nocturnal rambles, so he was put ashore as "a nuisance."

CONCERT rooms in India must, indeed, be paradises of comfort. "A hurricane in one or two corners, and abnormal mosquitoes elsewhere," is the experience of a miserable member of the audience.

FANCY!—over 9,000 persons die every year in India from snake-bites!

A VERY vexed question is to the front in Bombay—Shall ladies be admitted to clubs? If so, are special regulations in regard to smoking, &c., to be introduced? or are the fair visitants to be treated as belonging to the sterner sex? Society is divided. It may be surmised that the married men oppose the innovation which deprives them of the one place where they are safe, while the bachelors would be inclined, possibly, to impart to the club the flip of scandal, which alone is needed to make the life perfect. But why is another man's wife so preferable to one's own? To answer that question would puzzle many a candidate for honours.

A VISITOR from India was astonished the other day to find at the "Inventories" the steward of the ship on which he came to England dressed up as a "masher." This tends to prove what many people have all along thought, that the qualification of that genus is "snobbery."

A LOVELY and blushing bride was travelling amidst some of the gorgeous scenery of Western India, but she would not, or could not, admire the beauties of nature. At length the reason transpired. "Oh! Edward, it is so stupid and hot, and I do think it's horrid of you to be looking so much at the nasty scenery and not a bit at me." She was jealous of poor Dame Nature!

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

RUSSIA UNDER THE TZARS.*

The clock is chiming two!—the town is asleep, and a deep silence reigns, broken, after awhile, by the tread of a body of some fifteen men, who glide swiftly through the streets till they arrive at the door of a small house. But what is their object? Is it brigandage?—by no means! It is simply a nocturnal search in the Metropolis of the Russian Empire, the object of their anxiety being the daughter of a respectable citizen. Let us take a glance at their proceedings. Rushing violently upstairs, they unceremoniously enter the bedrooms of the mother and daughter, and ruthlessly bid the terrified women jump up from their beds, and dress. A remonstrance from the father that the soldiers should retire till the order was complied with passes unheeded, for the shameless ruffians persistently refuse to move, lest something should be destroyed which might implicate the offender or betray an accomplice. This unmanly scene finished, everything in the house is searched, letters are read, money and plate are plundered, and finally the writhing, panting maiden of but a few summers is torn from her family and carried away—whither? To the House of Preventive Detention, to await—but let us not anticipate. Henceforth the poor captive is No. 39 in the cells, her companion being a bed, a stool, a gas-pipe, and a water-pipe. Scarcely does the unhappy inmate of this lonely abode enter the prison walls when she hears tapplings at the wall, a mode of communicating ideas with which she soon becomes familiar; 'tis the sole means of enlivening existence left to the damsel. She now learns that she is accused of belonging to a society having for its object "the overthrow of the existing Order, subversion of property, religion, and the family." This she indignantly denies; so she is relegated to the cells in order to have time for reflection. A week elapses—a second—a third. A month passes, and this is soon multiplied by three, by four, by five. Half a year flits away, and not a sign of further examination. But at the end of the seventh month hope is renewed. "Have you reflected?" is the curt inquiry of the procurator. "I have nothing to add to that I have already told you," is the straightforward response of the hapless prisoner. "Indeed, then, I will make you rot in your cell!" is the brutish reply of the brute in human shape, who is supposed to administer justice. Want of air and exercise, coupled with insufficient and unsuitable food, soon wreak sad havoc, and the bloom of health rapidly vanishes from the cheeks of the captive. The brain, too, becomes no less affected than the body, so in a few short weeks the building vibrates with raps indicating that "something must be done for poor Thirty-nine." Thus it happens that the prisoners intercede with the warders, begging that a doctor may be sent to the prisoner. "There is nothing serious the matter," was the verdict of the inhuman follower of Esculapius. So Thirty-nine is left to rot! What happens is unrecorded. Fancy is left to finish the picture; but imagination shudders. Let us draw a veil across the unseen. Thus much for persons awaiting trial; but there are others more fortunate, who have managed to secure a judicial investigation. What is their condition—what tale do they tell? Convicted—all, or well-nigh all, political suspects are convicted in Russia—they are taken, maybe, to the Central Prison of Novo-Belgorod, a building surrounded by a high wall which completely isolates the inmates from the rest of the living world. Each man lives a lonesome life in his little cell, taking his walk at times when no other prisoner is similarly engaged. Cut off from human fellowship, tyrannised over by brutal gaolers, "oppressed with this deadly monotony of their sombre existence, infirm in health, and weakened in mind, they have nothing to look forward to but a life of suffering and death before the expiration of their sentence," and to crown all the prison rings with the heartrending sobs and maniacal laughter of those of the inmates whose sufferings have rendered them insane. But some pity must surely now be shown to such poor afflicted creatures? Far otherwise; acts of madness are considered as deeds of insubordination—the same punishments, the same penalties, are meted out to irresponsible beings as to those blessed with sense and endowed with reason.

But enough! Let us wend our steps to the Russian Bastille—the Fortress of Peter and Paul, the principal political prison of the Empire. Here not only are the inmates forbidden to communicate with one another, they are not even allowed to speak to the warders; in silence the latter come to the wicket, in silence they hand in the bread, in silence they depart. Lest, too, the prisoners should talk by "raps," they are put in alternate cells, the intervening gaps being occupied by gendarmes. The atmosphere is damp, and the coldness of the place chills to the bone. Neither brush, comb, nor soap being allowed within the precincts, the horrors of the confinement are increased by the personal dirt of the prisoners, who pass their existence reeking in filth and impurity. The food is well-nigh uneatable; bread thrown against the wall being so clammy that it will stick there, as if it were clay. Disease is, of course, rampant; the gloom of the awful hole inflames the eyes till it is with difficulty the lids will open. Dysentery and scurvy sweep off their victims by hundreds, and the poor wretches, uncared for and unheeded, literally "rot" in their own corruption. 'Tis the very embodiment of a living tomb! Well may the friends of the prisoners use their influence to get them removed from such an abode of misery, of suffering—anywhere, no matter where! Siberia, with all its horrors, is Paradise to this charnel house of human misery and suffering. Then there is "Administrative Exile" for such persons as are considered "dangerous suspects." These are sent to distant spots in the North, where the cold and snow render life well-nigh insupportable, and escape "the baseless fabric of a vision." That this mode of silencing opposition is the commonest of common occurrences is evidenced by the fact that between 1878 and 1881, a space of four short years, from six to eight thousand exiles were immured in Nature's prison—the very flower of the nation were thus buried alive; and to these figures, be it remembered, must be added the prisoners in the gaols—ordinary criminals and malefactors, untainted with the sins of "political" conspiracy.

But it may be urged, "Nihilism" demands a stern hand and a merciless soul. The struggle between Government and those who seek to overturn civilisation can only be carried on à l'outrance—pity is banished from the scene, and quarter is neither given nor expected. Admitted; but even then it might have been thought that severity would have been tempered with humanity. To allow persons to rot absolutely, not metaphorically, outrages every feeling and instinct in nature: while it must not be overlooked that these prisons, these living tombs, these brutalities, are not new and cunningly-devised terrors to meet new crimes and new criminals—they are part of the ordinary system of the country. At least, on the authority of "Stepniak" such is the case; and as he writes with studied moderation, it would not be reasonable to gainsay what he pens, merely because he is himself a "Nihilist." It is not within the bounds of supposition that the "powers that be" should themselves take the initiative in dragging to light misdeeds and acts of cruelty the very narration of which makes the blood congeal in the veins.

Such is Russia—"Holy" Russia—in the year of grace eighteen hundred and eighty-five. The record is sad and sickening, but it will be perused with interest; and if it awakens suspicions as to the honesty and integrity of the Colossus of the North—if it makes us, as Englishmen, recoil from trusting promises destined to be broken, and refrain from seeking pledges never intended to be binding—if, in short, it leads us to realise the true nature and instinct of our hereditary foe, "Russia under the Tsars" will have played, and not in vain, its part on the "Stage of Time."

MANUAL OF COLLOQUIAL ARABIC.*

Destiny seems to link us closer day by day with the Land of the Pharaohs. Spite of the "perish Egypt" school of politicians, we are still confronted with the problem, what is to be done? Added to this we are a great Muhammadan Power ruling the destinies of millions of subjects who bow the knee to the Prophet of Islām. In these circumstances, the study of Arabic cannot be otherwise than a matter of considerable importance, and the appearance of M. Tien's work is opportune and welcome. The first part consists of a grammar; this is followed by a syntax. Then in Part III. there are exercises to show the student how theoretical rules are applied to the practical purposes of language. To these are added dialogues, models of letters, weights, moneys, &c., and as a complement a well-stocked vocabulary.

The difficulty which has to be faced in a work of this nature is the circumstance that in modern Arabic dialects vary so much that it is impossible to lay down a code of language applicable to all parts and all countries. M. Tien has selected the Syrian style of conversation, and the only drawback is that a student familiar with this form of phraseology would find himself considerably out of his element were he to repair to the coast of the Red Sea, to Yemen, or the Hijāz; while North Africa, again, has its own peculiar modes of expression. The work is carefully prepared and accurately printed, and should find a place amongst the impedimenta of every officer whom fate may despatch to the land of Plagues; students, too, in general will find it a useful vade mecum in the acquirement of colloquial Arabic.

A CORRESPONDENT brings to a contemporary's notice that nearly sixty years ago telegraphy had made considerable strides in India. The Weekly Review for June 1828 says:—"The system of telegraphs has arrived at such perfection in the Presidency of Bombay that a communication may be made through a line of 500 miles in eight minutes." This, of course, must have been some form of the semaphore; for, in 1828, Ampère and Ritchie were only experimenting with an electric model, all unconscious of the later improvements of Cooke and Wheatstone, which were to convert telegraphy into an affair of everyday utility.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 30, 1885.

NEPAL.

WE have, in more or less recent issues, referred to British relations, in so far as they affect India, with Turkey and Persia. Nor have we been remiss in expressing the strong opinion we have all along entertained relative to the dealings of the late Government with Afghanistan. Kashmir, as practically a portion of Hindostan, has also claimed a few words. Working Eastward, the next State which attracts notice is Nepal.

A little Buddhist (or Jain), Himalayan, and Sub-Himalayan State, the lower part lying wholly under the shelter of the highest mountains in the globe, and containing as good shooting as any part of the world, Nepal, with its varied races of inhabitants, offers many subjects of interest on every side. Brian Hodgson as to the ethnographical, Falconer as to the geological and palæontological points of view, will occur to all.

Nepal consists—and never was a country so abruptly divided—of the hill and the plain; of the hill “produced,” as Euclid would have said, to a mountain of 29,000 feet; and of a woody fringe, sloping to the plains (itself in character almost a part of the plain), called the Terai. Intermediate lies the valley in which is situate Khatmandu, the capital. The length of the little State may, if we follow the line of the Sub-Himalayan range, be taken at about 450 miles, and its breadth, from North-East to South-West, at about a third of that distance.

It may well be supposed that a country thus “cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd” on the North, would seek its outlets on the South. And this is, naturally enough, the case. From the North the principal roads by which trade is carried on, and along which, therefore, the approach may be supposed to be least difficult, are thus described:—“The chief route runs North-East from Khatmandu, and, following up a tributary of the Kosi, passes the frontier station of Kuti or Nilam at an elevation of 14,000 feet. Another route, also starting from Khatmandu, follows the main stream of the Gundak, crosses the frontier near the station of Kirong (9,000 feet), reaching the Sangpu River at Tadum. Both these routes are extremely difficult; the only beasts of burthen available are sheep and goats, and practically everything but grain and salt is carried by men and women.”

So that here, as in Kashmir, Nature has done her best to screen from attack the grand Indian Empire, the protection and development of which has been confided to England.

The commercial intercourse of Nepal with Tibet may be assumed to be exceedingly small. It is far otherwise as regards the traffic with our own districts. From Bengal alone the little Buddhist State imported, in the last year (1878) given by Dr. Hunter, goods (chiefly cotton, wool, tobacco, and salt) to the extent of £455,000, and exported articles (stated to be chiefly rice, oilseeds, ponies and cattle, and yak tails) to the amount of £703,000, leaving the Nepalese a balance “to the good” of some £300,000. With the North-Western Provinces and Oudh their dealings, as given by Dr. Hunter, though smaller in amount, show an even larger disproportion of imports and exports, the latter being exactly twice the former. So we are, on the whole, “very good customers” to our neighbours next door.

For our present purpose, however, neither the mountain heights, which we gladly relinquish to Mr. Whympers, nor the shooting in the Terai (to which Sir S. Baker and other Shekarries—if any there be—of his calibre are heartily welcome) nor the trade statistics (which we gladly present to the Statistical Society on the occasion of their jubilee) interest us. We wish to inquire what the relations of the State are to ourselves.

Now, it is hardly too much to say that there is scarcely a State in, or on the confines of, India of which we are so absolutely ignorant as we are of Nepal. And it has come about, according to a late and very reliable writer,* in some degree on this wise.

Though we had, under the far-seeing guidance of Warren Hastings, opened up amicable relations with Tibet, we did nothing to prevent its invasion by Nepal in 1792. Whereon the Tibetans asked, and obtained, help from China, thus “permitting Chinese power to be made evident within our own natural borders.” We saved the Nepalese from being absorbed by China, “but not until it was too late to prevent the imposition of a Chinese tribute, which is still maintained.” We cannot, then, wonder at “the isolation which the Nepalese Government has since been so consistent in maintaining”—consistent, at all events, as regards ourselves. We have, it is true, a Resident at Khatmandu, a well-paid and much-coveted post, usually given to relatives of Governors-General like General Lawrence, or to ex-Under-Secretaries of the Calcutta Foreign Office. But these worthy officers might almost as well be at Meerut or Barrackpore. Go where they will, the Residents are waited on—let us use in its most literal sense the word entourés—by a crowd of respectful, but unpleasantly obsequious, attendants, deputed by the Court. The Residents see absolutely nothing of the state of the country. It has, we believe, not always been certain whether the Maharajah with whose real, or supposed, Representative our Resident had to transact business was alive or not.

Now, is this a state of things which ought to be allowed to continue? Why should we be content to slink into Nepal, and let our Resident act as he acts in no other State, hiding, as it were, his head in the sand?

It seems to us that, as regards all the Northern Frontier States of India, and the countries beyond them, we know more through the revelations of A.K. than through anything else. We cannot avoid the conclusion that, even as regards the Trans-Himalayan regions, we have been imperfectly informed. We have our A.K. abroad. Have not the Russians got Mr. Gladstone's dear friend O.K. at home? Have they not spies throughout the entire alphabet from A.K. to Z.K.? This is emphatically a game at which two can play.

* Mr. Boulger, in Calcutta Review, January, 1882.

But in Nepal the case is different. We have a right to have the fullest information as to a State so closely connected with us by territorial position. Nepal has offered us soldiers—its own troops are about 30,000—we have Goorkhas, and splendid fellows they are, in our service. Jung Bahadoor visited England, and formed a high opinion of our power. Yet all this has not brought us one step nearer to a cordial understanding with the Government. Our Resident knows who the man is with whom business has to be transacted; he knows, if he has been "resident" long enough, the difference between a Magar and a Newar. But he has no idea of what is going on at the Court.

This should be altered. The Nepal Government should be disabused of the idea—if they entertain it—that we are aught but their fast friends. A Resident who could show the Durbar that our interests and theirs are on the whole identical, who would avoid petty disputes about individual cases, and look to higher interests, would do more for us in Nepal in a year than has been done in the last half century.

Are not the sympathy and the confidence of the Nepal Government worth an effort? Have we got them? What should we say did we, through bad management, find 20,000 Goorkhas sent down against us instead of for us in the event of a crisis?

SIR STAFFORD NORTHCOTE.

THE removal of Sir Stafford Northcote to the "serene obscurity" of the Lords ought not, in a journal devoted to Indian topics, to be dismissed without something more than a passing remark. It is not too much to say that of all Secretaries who have presided at the India Office he was the one who combined in the highest degree urbanity, industry, and freedom from preconceived ideas. With political controversy, except where Indian interests are involved, we have no concern; but we think it not out of place emphatically to express our concurrence in the subjoined remarks, contained in a leading article of the Times. Observing that, as is well known, Sir S. Northcote's retirement from the Commons is not due to his own wish, "but is a crowning example of the unselfish regard for the interests of his party, which is one of his many honourable characteristics," the article proceeds:—

In knowledge of Parliamentary business, in mastery of finance, and in general experience of affairs, Sir Stafford Northcote has no rival in the Conservative party, while his unflinching courtesy, habitual tolerance, and natural fairness, command universal popularity and respect. It is a common saying that he is too good for a party leader in such times as the present, and although to be too good is to be not good enough, goodness such as his is so rare in public life that no philosophy can enable us without regret, and something akin to shame, to see it hustled with scant ceremony into the House of Lords. His party will find no one better acquainted with his facts, or better able to marshal them in such a manner as to satisfy calm and dispassionate judges, but they, perhaps, need a leader who will meet misrepresentation with more showy weapons than his taste or his temper allow him to use.

We fear that the new Ministry will have much cause to regret the absence from the Lower House of the sound judgment, the calmness which nothing could disturb, which so eminently characterise the late leader of the Opposition.

He seemed especially marked out, whether as peer or as commoner, for the Indian Secretaryship; and not a few Indian officers, civil or military, who have, through Sir Stafford's personal and close attention to individual, as to other, cases, obtained boons, or rights, withheld owing to the nonchalance of his predecessors in office, will heartily endorse what we have said.

We are well pleased to hear that Her Majesty, whose appreciation of Sir Stafford's indefatigable services is well known, insisted on his taking a higher rank in the Peerage than that with which his own modesty would have been contented.

SIR P. LUMSDEN AND THE ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

SIR PETER LUMSDEN read, at the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, on the 22nd inst., a paper on the countries and tribes bordering on the Koh-i-Baba range. The Marquis of Lorne, president, was in the chair, and was accompanied by the Princess Louise. Sir Peter, having mentioned that in the district described names did not signify towns or villages, but merely the sites where they once existed, and that there were generally two names for each stream or location, said that in November, when the Commission crossed the mountain range, the valley of Kushan was literally covered with Turkomans with their ploughs.

Here, as in many other places, cultivators of unirrigated land, he was assured, got a return of seventy to a hundredfold. Yet, with all this return, it was stated that Penjdeh did not produce sufficient for the requirements of its home consumption, and that grain could generally be imported at a cheaper rate from Afghan Turkestan than it could be grown on the spot. Some 7,300 families were settled in Penjdeh, with about 4,000 in Yulatan; they were subdivided into six factions. Their encampments of kikitkas presented the appearance of beehives or wigwams, and were anything but picturesque; the dwelling of the chief was distinguished by a scroll, some two feet deep, worked in carpet-work, and placed round the top. There was a marked difference between the Afghans and Turkomans. In Penjdeh the Commission scarcely ever saw an armed man, and found the Sariks, instead of being the dreaded alaman-sweeping and slave-dealing people they came to see, an industrious, hardworking race, at that time busy from morning to night in the excavation and clearing of their canals. The Sariks were stalwart men of good physique, resembling very much in character the Turks. They were a shrewd, hard-headed, practical people, and continually expressed their desire for security and permanent settlement.

On the 26th of January Captains Maitland and Yate left Bala Murghab to report on the country between Murghab and Heri-Rood Rivers, hitherto unexplored; and Sir Peter proceeded to give Captain Maitland's description of this portion of the Badghis. In concluding, Sir Peter said that the country was capable of great resources. The climate was good, though the winter was cold, and great storms were not unfrequent during the winter months. With a settled Government and increased population, there was no reason why this should not become one of the most prosperous tracts of Central Asia. A discussion followed, in which Sir Henry Rawlinson, Colonel Stewart, and M. Lessar took part.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JULY 6, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, June 16th; Madras and Allahabad, June 14th; Calcutta, June 14th.

OUR readers will have been glad to see that the new Secretary for India has been re-elected for Woodstock without his personal presence being thought necessary, his opponent being a bumpiously-insignificant Mr. Grant.

The result of to-night's meeting of the Commons, the first occasion on which the newly-constituted Ministry, complete as to its members, is destined to face an Opposition, not, we fear, of the most scrupulous kind, is looked forward to with great interest. The new Administration have not even five months to set things in some degree right after five years of unparalleled blundering and incapacity; but, as the Times said the other day, they must display a fertility in blundering, surpassing that of their predecessors in their most unfortunate moments, if in five months they can cover up with their own misdeeds and mishaps the mass accumulated during five years by the late Cabinet.

FROM India the last news is, as usual on Monday, contained in the Times' Calcutta telegram, which refers to one or two subjects worthy of more extended notice than either time or space at present permit, and to which we propose hereafter to recur. The items of actual intelligence may be briefly summarised.

THE Russians are once more afraid of the "threatening" attitude of the Afghans (who are "massing their troops"), and affirm that the Amir is "determined to take revenge" for the Penjdeh massacre. The Sarik Turcomans, too, poor fellows, are terribly frightened, and urgently claim Russian protection. We know what all this means. At the same time we hear that Russian telegraph-offices have been opened at Karibent, Rukhnabad, and Merv.

WE felt sure that Sir P. Lumsden would not be noticed on the Queen's birthday. As a member of the Indian Council, he could as little escape the inevitable invitation to dine with the Secretary of State, as a Prussian official can help having the third class of the Red Eagle "with oakleaves" thrust on him. But his very presence in Afghanistan was offensive to the Divine figure from the North (which had nevertheless agreed with us that a Commissioner should be deputed on either side), and this was enough. Not because he had done his work ill, but because the work he had been set to do was distasteful to another overbearing and over-reaching Power, he is to be ostentatiously slighted. Is this the way in which a statesman (well, there were no such folk in the late Cabinet, but), a gentleman, would have acted? Sir Peter has, by universal consent, displayed rare ability and self-control in a position of most exceptional difficulty, and well has he earned the G.C.B. which the new Government have advised Her Majesty (with whom he dined on Wednesday last) to confer on him. Of course this G.C.B. is a thorn in the side of the Russians. They gave nothing to Komaroff for a wanton attack? Oh dear, no! Is not Russia immaculate and holy?

WE see that 400 lakhs of rupees was the approximate cost of the late "preparations" in India alone. Let us keep ourselves duly prepared, and not have to spend huge sums every time Russia thinks fit to give us a scare. Who and what is Russia, that we should put it in her power to fine us several coores periodically?

NOTHING very definite is reported from Budakshan as to the revolt of the Ameer's cousin, Isa (Esau). But it is generally considered certain that the movement is due, at least as much to Russian instigation, as to the cupidity of Isa, who seems, however, to have "netted" a cool million.

THE insurrection in Bhootan appears to be a storm in a teacup. Two sons of the Deb, or temporal Rajah, being Penlos, or provincial Governors, rebelled. The Dhurm, or spiritual, Rajah has, with the Deb, retired to the capital, Punakka. The Government of India has been asked for arms, but intend to observe strict neutrality. The fire will burn itself out in a short time.

A VERY interesting letter from a Hindoo lady on the compulsory seclusion of Hindoo wives appears in the Times, in extracts from the Times of India. To this subject, one of the deepest interest and importance, we propose shortly to recur.

AMONG other journals sent us from time to time, we have derived, if not instruction, at least amusement, from an article (by Mr. Jardine, C.S.) in the otherwise most interesting journal for July of the National Indian Association, on "Education among the Burmese." Fancy being told that the Burmese are in a deplorable condition, because there are no Burmese treatises on contract, "tort," and evidence! We rather envy them, and are sincerely glad to hear that some—we hope very many—years will elapse before any Burman will "endow his native literature with any translation or original work on these subjects." "No progress," we are further informed, "can be made, except through the reading of English works." When Burma was a highly cultivated, and highly civilised, country, we were, perhaps, a population of about two to the square mile, dyeing our skins with various abominations, and burning people in huge baskets. Yet the Burmese are, forsooth, to be condemned, because, in four millions, there is only one person who has thought it worth his while to take the degree of B.A., and none who has taken the trouble to get himself dubbed LL.B.!

WE have not the smallest sympathy with the attempt to indoctrinate the Burmese with the English legal chicanery, of which Mr. Jardine seems so enamoured, about "contracts and torts." We would as soon give an innocent girl a course of reading of Paul de Kock's novels. We have ensured to the Burmese safety for person, honour, property. If we are to teach them—and the remark need not be thought to be applied to Burma only—let us give them what they can understand and assimilate. They were civilised when we were savages; let us not suppose that they have become savages because we have become civilised. Is civilisation confined to B.A.'s and LL.B.'s? Are these the ne plus ultra?

THE Naval and Military Gazette, which has appeared every Wednesday for the past fifty-two years, comes out this week much enlarged. In addition to the ordinary matter contained in service papers, it has several new features. The journal has always been written with exceptional ability, and we are glad it is enlarged. "One cannot have too much of a good thing."

MR. J. B. BAILEY, of Reading, writes to us (St. James's Gazette) as follows with reference to the desirability of exploring the Great Pyramid:—

Now that Great Britain is dominant at Cairo, would it not be a good plan to clear away the sand and rubbish from the base of the Great Pyramid, right down to its rocky foundation, and try to discover those vast corridors, halls, and temple, containing priceless curiosities and treasures, with which tradition in all ages has credited the Great Pyramid? This wonderful building, of such exquisite workmanship, was erected years before any of the other pyramids, which are only humble imitations, built by another nation, and also for other purposes; for neither King Cheops nor anybody else was ever interred beneath this mighty mass of stone. The smaller pyramids also exhibit neither the nicety of proportion, nor the exactness of measurement, both of which characterise the first pyramid.

How little we get below the surface in India! Fancy this happening within 150 miles from Calcutta! The New Zealander will have been dead a hundred years, at this rate, before the people in Central India find out that the English Raj is extinct. We should hardly be "surprised to hear" that there are folks, somewhere in the remoter parts of Hindostan, who never knew that it existed.

A remarkable instance of the tenacity of old beliefs among an ignorant class lately occurred not very far from Calcutta. The idea that Government always inaugurated every good work with human sacrifice was long current among the lower orders of the Indian people, but it might be supposed that it had died out long ago. It appears, however, to be as strong as ever. The boatmen on the Ganges, near Rajmehal, somehow came to believe that the Government required a hundred thousand human heads as the foundation for a great bridge, and that Government officers were going about the river in search of heads. A hunting party, consisting of four Europeans, happening to pass in a boat, were set upon by the 120 boatmen, with the cry "Gulla Katta," or cut-throats, and only escaped with their lives after the greatest difficulty. The men were arrested, and thirty-one of them sentenced to terms of from one to three months' imprisonment.

WITH reference to our recent article on Kashmir, we see with pleasure that we are to have a Resident in Gilgit. We pointed out, however, that it is of no use to establish a post for a few months of the year only. Our officer must be there en permanence. He will find plenty to watch, if only he will keep his eyes open:—

Colonel Lockheart has been ordered to Gilgit, on special duty under the Foreign Department. The place is an important one, as it affords a convenient post of observation for watching Chitral and the Baroghil Pass. The possession of such a point by the Maharaja of Kashmir has been a constant source of uneasiness to our Government, and the present mission is probably with the object of intercepting Russian intrigues with Srinagar.

Why the possession of Gilgit by the Maharaja of Kashmir need be a great source of perturbation to the Calcutta Foreign Office we hardly see. Make a firm friend of the Kashmir man, who assuredly does not want to be swallowed up, show him what assimilation by Russia means, and you would have little trouble. But it seems to us that the old race of Politicals, who had a rational sympathy with Native States, have gone—well, to heaven—and have taken all their traditions with them. Had we a few such men, we should hear little enough of "Russian intrigues at Srinagar."

SOME old denizens of Calcutta may never have heard the real history of the disappearance of Sheikh Esau's stables. La voilà.

Passers by old Sheikh Esau Bin Curtas' stables in Dhurumtollah often wonder, writes the Planters' Gazette, why they no longer re-echo the neigh of the Arabs that tenanted those stalls of yore. Probably they attribute the silence to the demand for Arabs having ceased; more probably to financial disaster. Neither was the cause. It was a sentimental freak that deprived Calcutta of her Arabian horse mart. At the zenith of his prosperity the old Sheikh thought it time to call at Government House. Of course, as a horse-dealer, he was refused the entrée. But he realised the reason of his exclusion. As an Arab Sheikh he might have shaken hands with the Viceroy, but, as a stable-keeper, never. So he at once gave up his entire connection with horse-flesh, and closed his mart.

HAVING no interest in guano, except as far as concerns a small garden—which, however, seems to absorb it on the school-girl principle that the butter ought to be twice as thick as the bread—we have the less hesitation in calling attention, for the benefit of those of our readers who may be inclined to invest in the bonds, obligations, debentures, or what not, of guano-bearing states, to the subjoined. If it be true, and guano do not come down to half the price of stable manure, we abandon all claims to prophetic inspiration. A correspondent of the Times says:—

I visited a few years since, in the State of Texas, some wonderful deposits of this kind (then several hundred miles from any railway), in two immense caves, known as the Uvalde and Cibolo. The deposits of bats' guano in these caves cover an area of more than two square miles, and the depth at many places is found to be upwards of 50 feet. These deposits have been accumulating for an unknown period, and the accumulation still continues. At the approach of night, myriads of bats begin to make their exit from these caves, and this continues for hours, so dense at times as to obscure from view the sky over them; as the daylight comes on the wanderers return to their shelter. These deposits are estimated at several millions of tons, and the guano is as rich in ammonia as the best Peruvian. Chemical tests have established its great value as a fertilizer, and it is now finding its way to market in large quantities.

We have never quite "seen" why the man who can most correctly put his Greek accents should of necessity be the best District Administrator for India, nor why the road to the Indian Civil Service should lie through the Binomial Theorem and the Differential Calculus. Dis aliter visum. The Civil Service Commissioners have thought otherwise. But we agree with an "Oxonian," who lately exercised the Englishman's normal privilege of grumbling in the normal way (so often threatened to Continental innkeepers), of "writing to the Times," that reasonable notice should in all cases be given of any change of subjects, or of the number of marks allotted to them. If this be not done the Examination is not a fair race, but a very unfair handicap, unfair to those especially who have taken up the subjects suddenly excluded or depreciated in value. "Oxonian" shall speak for himself:—

Allow me to call attention to a grave injustice which is about to be inflicted on those candidates for the Indian Civil Service Examination who make mathematics their special subject. I allude to the arbitrary and capricious omission from the approaching examination, without any previous notice or warning whatsoever, of the paper on higher "mixed mathematics," which has always been regarded by the more advanced mathematical candidates as the most important and most difficult portion of their work. The change in the character of the examination may or may not be justified by expediency, but to effect it without previous notice is in the highest degree inequitable to candidates who have been led to expect that no alteration would be made. Surely this serious hardship in an examination of great public importance, where the candidates have much at stake, deserves not merely to be commented upon, but to be removed.

As just observed, we have no velleity for studies which nowise conduce to fitting a man for his post. Do we expect to turn the entire Indian Civil Service into Astronomers Royal? The training required for the present Examinations is far too unpractical, and, if the word be permissible, priggish. The first living Indian Statesman has repeatedly said that no man is fit to be entrusted with the charge of an Indian District "who cannot administer justice on horseback." Will the Differential Calculus enable a man so accurately to ascertain his own equipoise as not to tumble off his horse into the outstretched arms of the litigants?

WE see with pleasure that one of our Hindoo fellow-subjects has greatly distinguished himself at the Medical College at New York. Mr. Krishna Rao Bullel would have taken the first prize after but six months' study, had not the college rules confined it to those who had attended the whole curriculum, extending over three years. Dr. Bullel was singled out by the President for such expressions of eulogy that the whole audience cheered him to the echo. Naturally enough, it was a rare success.

IN their Report for the past year, the Civil Service Commissioners give some facts as to the Indian Civil Service Examinations, which may interest our readers:—

For the Civil Service of India there was one competition only, and there were 185 candidates for 38 vacancies, nearly 5 for every vacancy. Seven examinations having been held since the limits of the Indian Civil Service were fixed at 17 to 19 instead of 17 to 21, a basis of facts has been obtained for a comparison between these and the seven preceding examinations, with the view of ascertaining what has been the effect of the change with regard to the numbers, race, and educational antecedents of the candidates. The proportion of candidates has varied little; in the former period there were 1,282 for 222 appointments, in the latter 1,112 for 220. England has raised her number of successful candidates from 95 in the former to 105 in the latter period, Scotland from 27 to 31, while Ireland has sunk from 23 to 16. Europeans from India have also fallen off from 55 to 47, and natives from 4 to 3. Natives from other countries do not vary in number, being 18 in each period. It is curious that in the earlier 7 years 26 natives from India competed, and in the latter only 10, of whom 5 were in the single year 1884, a fact which may imply a tendency towards increase in the future. No distinction in social position of candidates is found between the two periods. As might be expected, a far larger proportion of successful candidates have come direct from the public schools, without any other special training, since the change in age. This will be illustrated by the fact that 17 of the 222 came from those schools in the former period, and 80 of the 220 in the latter. On the other hand, a great decrease is shown in the number who come from the universities. It is stated, however, that a number of successful candidates pass their two years' probation in the universities, where in some cases special provision is made for their benefit.

THE oldest newspaper in the world, the Pekin Gazette, has lately taken a new lease of life. This venerable journal has changed its form. Established in the year 911, the Pekin Gazette has been published regularly since 1351. Under the new arrangement three editions are published; the first, the King-Paou, printed upon yellow paper, constitutes the official gazette of the Middle Kingdom; the second, the Hsing-Paou (commercial journal), also printed upon yellow sheets, contains information interesting to the trading community; while the third, the Titani-Paou (provincial gazette), printed upon red paper, consists of extracts from the other two editions. The total circulation of the three issues is 15,000 copies. The editorship is confided to a committee of six members of the Academy of Han-Lin.

THE subjoined is good news in its way; but the bulk of the supplies for the Bolan line ought clearly not to go round by Calcutta, but by the Indus; and this, we understand is what, to a great extent, has been now arranged:—

Each train of railway material that has been despatched by the East Indian Railway for the extension through the Bolan has contained a complete section of the road, inclusive of chairs, keys, &c., so that the work of laying the track can be carried on without any interruption whatever.

IN mercy to the numerous body of our readers who possess dogs, we insert the annexed from the Indian Daily News. It is well known that mange is far more severe, as a rule, in camels than in dogs. (With the latter frequent washing with potato-water is a sure preventative, and, in early stages, a tolerably certain cure.) The writer is serving on the Afghan Frontier Commission:—

I observed in your issue, which arrived this morning, a reference to the destruction of a large number of camels at Suakim by order of the veterinary surgeons, as the animals were suffering from mange. If the statement is correct, there can be no doubt that the shooting of the animals was an enormous blunder; for not only can camels work when suffering from mange, but it is a disease that, in camels, can easily be cured with kerosene oil. I should think fifty per cent. of the Mission camels have mange, and very comical they look without a scrap of hair on their ugly bodies, but we never think of laying one up on this account.

It is clear that horse vets. are not camel vets. Had we not—as we are likely to stay in Egypt as long as the Hebrews did in the land of Goshen—better provide ourselves with a Royal Camel Veterinary College?

Chit Chat.

WHEN Natives do understand English they do not mince their language. Here is a translation of a work in the vernacular: "A description of the sentiment of love, of the six seasons, and of a woman from top to toe."

A NATIVE journal sums up the advantages of English education upon our swarthy-faced brethren in the East in the following pretty manner:—"He no longer tastes the love of his parents, nor relishes the affections of his relatives. Sometimes he is an elderly bachelor, who is free to do anything and everything he chooses." A good many people would like to receive an education which would, when necessity required, have such a result.

"TEN bottles of champagne to the fellow who can best imitate the voice of an animal!" cried one of a set of merry boon companions. "Agreed!" said the rest, and now one after the other tried his skill at neighing, grunting, crowing, and squeaking. At length one stepped forward into the circle and did nothing.

Perfect stillness for the space of five minutes. Then the silent performer observed, "There—that was a fish!" And he won the prize.

A SAD occurrence is reported from India. Two officers of the 14th Hussars, Lieutenants Seymour and Bently-Innes, were playing billiards, when they were both struck with lightning, the latter being killed on the spot, while the former died after a few minutes. Well may the moralist preach, "In the midst of life we are in death."

BURMESE soothsayers are busy forecasting the events of the year, with none too encouraging results as far this poor mundane sphere is concerned. Here are a few items:—"Disease will be frequent amongst men, blight in vegetation, and chaff in grain; quarrels will be rife, and a war will break out in Esanaggi (wherever that may be); there will be famine during six months together, with smallpox and measles. On the other hand, male children born this year will have plenty of friends and renown, and wives and descendants, but they will be crooked-minded and of dark machinations; there will be disaster among rulers, and fires in every town. Each tribe and profession will be afflicted, and great mortality will prevail amongst birds and cattle, and men will die from eating their flesh. On the other hand, fish and aquatic animals will thrive, but betel-nuts and onions will be scarce; poisonous reptiles and insects will be numerous, and the earth will lose its fertility. It will be unlucky this year to move our home to go on a long journey; to wear black or red attire; to be born any day but Saturday; and to have a mole or birth-mark on one's shoulder. Ladies should be careful to avoid dancing, or any addition to their families." What a pleasant prospect! It must be owing to those wicked Tories.

POOR Burmah is in despair. It has been discovered that during a long series of years the Judicial Commissioners have been in the habit of giving diametrically opposite judgments. This is in itself an evil of no inconsiderable magnitude, but its effects are intensified by the circumstance that the Native magistracy is wont to take its cue from the higher luminaries, who never agree. The result may well be imagined.

"C'EST magnifique, mais ce n'est pas la guerre," was the clever description in India of Gladstone's famous speech in the House of Commons when he asked for a vote of eleven millions to check the Russians—and didn't do it.

ENGLAND does not stand alone as regards the ungenial and chilly nature of the fast departing summer. At Simla, in the last week of May, the hail lay on the ground like snow—thick enough, indeed, to enable the unhappy residents to indulge in the pastime of hail-balling.

A WOULD-BE bridegroom at Bombay agreed after a lengthened courtship to marry a fair maiden of whose charms he had become enamoured; but on the day of the wedding he got royally drunk, and thrashed the girl's father, her mother, and the bride herself. He was plucky in his cups. It might have been supposed that the mother-in-law would, in company with her daughter, have been able to hold her own, especially when the husband's assistance was thrown into the scale.

A PARSİ lady advertises for a husband. She describes herself as being accomplished though not pretty, having a fair knowledge of English, and able to play the piano. She further adds that her father set apart a "decent" sum for her dowry—age fifteen. The essentials on the part of the "intended" were that he should not be less than seventeen or more than twenty-five years of age, of a goodly presence, educated, and in sound health!

A CHINESE nurse while on board the P. & O. steamer Valetta, enraged at her mistress's conduct in forcing her to go to England, threw overboard the child in her arms, and then jumped off the deck herself.

WHAT on earth is the "Orissa People's Association?" They seem to be memorialising everybody on every subject and in every direction. One communication relates to "a very unnameable domestic case," another to the "sanitary state of Kuttak," a third to the "Franco-Chinese War." Clearly all is fish that comes to their net.

SIMLA is epigrammatically termed a collection of palaces and pigsties. How nice!

CALCUTTA has found a new offence—"technical assault." "What is that?" inquired a bewildered luminary of the law. The pleader replied that the accused rushed up to assault his client, but did not do so. Need it be added that the prisoner at the bar was acquitted.

Movement of ground huts at "Pondicherry." What a strange way of describing the fluctuation of the market in connection with this article of commerce! Again, "Planting Notes" is a heading in a native paper—did they grow?

THERE must be something in the air at Palghat in Madras. A few weeks since three children were born at a birth, and the same day three calves likewise saw the light of day, claiming but one mother.

A LADY and gentleman were recently walking in a country village in Bengal when they observed a huge tiger just in front of them. It so happened that the lady's pet dog, not accustomed to such a visitor, far from showing signs of fear ran at the beast, barking as hard as it's tiny mouth would allow it to do. The circumstance was turned to happy account, for the savage monster annoyed at this petty source of irritation seized the yelping cur and ran off with him to the jungle, to the relief of the travellers, who escaped scot free, minus their dog.

THE following Ode to Tobacco merits reproduction:—

Tobacco's but an Indian weed,
Grows green in morn, but dies at eve;
It shows our decay,
We are but clay.
Think of this when you smoke tobacco.

The pipe that is so lily white,
Wherein so many take delight;
It's broken with a touch,
Man's life is such.
Think of this when you take tobacco.

The pipe that is so foul within,
It shows man's soul is stained with sin;
It doth require
To be purged with fire.
Think of this when you smoke tobacco.

The dust that from the pipe doth fall,
It shows we are nothing but dust after all,
For we came from the dust,
And return we must.
Think of this when you smoke tobacco.

The ashes that are left behind
Do seem to put us all in mind,
That unto dust,
Return we must
Think of this when you take tobacco.

The smoke that doth so high ascend,
Shows that man's life must have an end;
The vapour's gone,
Man's life is done.
Think of this when you take tobacco.

It is not given to all of us to see ourselves as others see us. We believe that when Mr. Ellis, of the Madras Civil Service, died, the present Sir Barrow Ellis was privileged to read in the Indian papers what they thought of him, on the supposition that the Bombay civilian had been gathered to his fathers. A similar fate has been reserved for S. R. William Muir, who has been killed by the Times of India. The real person was, of course, a medical officer of the same name.

THE Salvationists are certainly striking in their proceedings. In the Punjab they walk about with a blood-red cross on their foreheads, the effect being enhanced by a garland of flowers round the neck, and a rope girding the waist.

THE Madrassees (Europeans) are said to be a benighted race, but evidently they appreciate a joke. When some ladies won a race at Yercand, the prizes selected were brooches in the shape of a curb and bit. Doubtless the committee had a lively experience in the unruly members of the fair sex.

THERE must be something very peculiar and wrong in connection with the army in India—otherwise how could it have happened that Lord Ripon agreed with his predecessor, Lord Lytton, as regards the measures to be adopted. True at school pedagogues used to inculcate into the rising youth that "it is lawful to be taught by an enemy," but then politicians are above the things of this mundane sphere.

GOURMANDS, take note. Persian meat is always tender, as for their dishes—exce. "Faisanjan" is delicious, consisting of chicken or mutton, with a sauce of walnuts and pomegranate juice. "Khurisht-i-ali" is meat cooked with dried plums; their sweetmeats too are proverbially excellent. Evidently the Lord Mayor should, in company with the head cook at the Mansion House, pay a visit to the land of Iran.

THE JOURNALS OF MAJOR-GENERAL C. G. GORDON, C.B.*

"Now, mark this: if the Expeditionary Force—and I ask for no more than two hundred men—does not come in ten days, the town may fall; and I have done my best for the honour of our country.—Good-bye." Such are the last recorded words of the hero of Khartoum. For many weary months, unaided, he had kept at bay the thousands of Arabs who had besieged the town. Cut off from the civilized world, he and a few other Europeans stood alone in the city. Without there was a bloodthirsty activity and furious zeal; within was half-hearted eagerness and thinly disguised treachery, yet; week after week, Gordon's indomitable energy and inexhaustible fertility of resource kept his foes at bay. But the end was at hand. Over the portals of destiny the fatal words "Too late!" were inscribed. To cope with the difficulties of his position, whatever human skill and foresight could achieve had been done, with a degree of success which has rendered the defence of Khartoum one of the most memorable episodes in the pages of England's history; but even Gordon—great as was the magic of his name—had failed to rouse the Ministry to a sense of their responsibilities, and while the one was adapting means to an end with well-nigh superhuman energy, the others were halting, hesitating, and irresolute. The issue could not be doubtful; and General Gordon fell a martyr to the indecision of his Government, and the vacillation of the rulers in high places. Let us, however, with a blush of shame, draw a veil over this sad and humiliating chapter in the annals of our Empire, and try and gather from the present journals some insight into the man.

To allude to his religious zeal is all but unnecessary; it is well known that Gordon was a man of most deep and earnest convictions. With him there was, in the fullest sense, an abiding sense of the faith to which he clung; there was, as it were, the enthusiastic fervour of the Muslim fatalist tempered with the gentle humility of the Christian believer. Realising that "all things work together," he endeavoured to aid in the result; and it is a noticeable fact, that the hero whom England now mourns with a depth of feeling seldom elicited from our cold and unimpassioned race—the man whose memory is encircled with a halo of glory—whose very name is a household word on the lips of his admiring fellow-countrymen, was an upright Christian officer, who never sacrificed his conscience on the altar of self-interest, and who never was ashamed to confess the faith that was in him.

Scarcely less incumbent is it to refer to Gordon's indifference to danger. "I will not give up the place except with my life" was no idle utterance, but the deep-seated determination of a man to whom death brought no terrors. Indeed, the very circumstances of the defence of Khartoum are themselves a most eloquent tribute to the lion-hearted courage of a warrior whom no peril could daunt, no risk could discourage—in very truth, he was a hero of heroes.

Perhaps, however, not less than his unsurpassed courage and bravery, his unswerving adherence to his convictions has endeared him to the nation whose interests he so faithfully served. With Gordon there was no shadow of turning; when once he had made up his mind that a thing was right his outspokenness might offend—he cared not. Worldly prospects might be injured, nay, ruined, no matter so long as his conscience was clear. Instances in the journal teem at every turn. "I see no reason to try and force me to do what I do not think right, and which I can consequently do only in a half-hearted manner if I ever undertook it, which I will not." Such was the way in which the defender of Khartoum reserved to himself liberty of action, even when the Government of his country were in the balance against him. Again: "No one can judge the waste of money and expense of life in the present expedition; it is an utter waste of both—but it is simply due to the indecision of our Government." What language to address to those who sent him to the Sudan—to those who, with a stroke of the pen, could blight his fairest prospects, and ruin all hope of a career! He heeded not. In his eyes truth was sacred, and he scorned to pander to the susceptibilities of a Government who had, in his estimation, forfeited their claim to respect, and their right to esteem.

"O that some power the gift would gie us,
To see ourselves as ithers see us," is a severe standard of criticism, but in Gordon's case he need not have feared the result. While the world were ceaseless in their praises, and never tiring in their expressions of commendation, he was equally incessant in self-depreciation and humility. "It is not over praiseworthy if one holds out, when, if you do not, your throat is cut." "I declare that sometimes I give a decision, and have no more idea of what the decision is about than a cow." These, and many more sentences in the same strain, will not lessen our admiration for a man with whom self was always a secondary consideration, and duty the first demand on his energies and powers.

That a man so successful in ruling his fellow-creatures as was * "The Journals of Major-General C. G. Gordon, C.B., at Khartoum," with Introduction and Notes, by A. Egmont Hake. London: Kegan Paul, Trench, and Co. 1885.

Gordon—that a man “born to command” should have been endowed with plain, straightforward common-sense—is well-nigh a truism. Here is a random glance at his mode of argument:—“If once our men get sickly up here, and our programme is a skeddaddle, the consequences might be most disastrous. The skeddaddle programme would cool all the people against us, and strengthen the Mahdi immensely; and then there is no way to avoid the heats, unless by the skeddaddle programme; but if you agree with the Turks you avoid the heats and the skeddaddle programme, and have the people with you.” So again: “Therefore, I maintain we must instal Zubair with a subsidy, or give over the country to the Sultan with a subsidy. There is no option.” This is a plain, clear way of putting things, from which it is difficult to escape, at once inspiring confidence, and creating respect.

There remains yet one trait in Gordon's character which shows that, far as he towered above his fellow-creatures in strength of character and force of intellect, he was still “a man for all that.” His sense of fun and satire he shared with every one borne into this mundane sphere. In the midst of a siege calculated to tax his energies to the utmost—in the presence of twenty dangers, which might well have blanched the hair and paled the cheek—the mind which directed all could find leisure to laugh at a black mother and her two sons, who, for the first time in their lives, had seen themselves in a mirror—the grins and smiles of delight delighted him. “I know if I was chief I would never comply myself, for I am incorrigible,” was his way of emphasizing his insubordination. When a turkey-cock became noisy and disagreeable he swung him to sleep, recording at the time this puzzling problem: “The putting the head under the wing acts with all birds, but it is the cock alone who gets mesmerised by the chalk lines drawn in front of his beak. How do you account for this?” Fancy!—what a question to address “to the Chief of the Staff!”

It would be easy to multiply, ad infinitum, extracts from the Journal, but it is needless. The work is sure to be read, not alone in England, but in every clime where a chord of sympathy has been touched—where there exists admiration for noble chivalry, unbounded courage, and a hero's death.

COFFEE CULTURE IN THE OLD AND NEW WORLDS.*

We are too apt to speak of coffee as a product as entirely foreign to the interests of English producers, as its flavour, in an unadulterated form, undoubtedly is to the mass of Englishmen. A Persian Envoy was once gravely asked by an English lady whether it could possibly be true that some of his countrymen “actually worshipped the Sun?” “So would you, my lady, had you ever seen him,” was the somewhat trenchant reply given on a foggy day of a London November. And our lower classes, by whom, after all, the bulk of what is sold as coffee is consumed, have about as little idea what it really is, as an untravelled Londoner has of the effulgence of the sun when beheld through an atmosphere so exquisitely pure that the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites are discernible by the naked eye.

Irrespective of his interest in coffee as a consumer, the Englishman is deeply concerned as a producer. It has been estimated by a contemporary that no less than seventy millions of British subjects are interested (taking India and Ceylon together) in the coffee plant, as against thirty-seven millions in all the rest of the world. The printing in English of a Report primarily destined to afford the Colonial Minister of the Netherlands information about Brazilian, as a dangerous competitor with Javan, coffee-culture, is a tolerably substantial admission of the magnitude of British interest in the matter.

The details of the methods employed in bringing the coffee pod and berries to perfection necessarily vary not a little in different countries, and are hardly of a nature to deserve particular attention in these columns. For these we cannot do better than refer readers to the work itself, one of the most exhaustive monographs it has ever been our lot to peruse, and one the instructive character of which is enhanced by the admirable maps illustrating the text. For the general reader an alphabetical index might, on account of the great length of the chapters, have been desirable, though the table of contents is copious and fairly explicit.

Palgrave, in the interesting narrative of his journey to Central Arabia, tells us that each berry of the Arabian coffee is sorted, the best being laid aside for the Sultan of Turkey (the Suzerain) and the Arabs; and not obscurely hints that we in England get little enough of the real article.

“Our American cousin” seems even worse off. The list of substances employed in New York to give the desired colour to the berry takes away one's breath. Nor do we find much consolation in being assured that they are “used only in secret and by stealth (p. 240).” Arsenic, Venetian red, chromate of lead, ferrocyanide of potassium, and umber, are used to colour the beans! A neat catalogue of some of the most active poisons in existence. “The beans, being porous or spongy, absorb the arsenic and lead so thoroughly, that it is almost impossible to remove it (them) by any roasting or chemical process.” Let us hope that very little coffee reaches us from Brooklyn, New York, where these delectable processes appear to flourish!

It would be well that this valuable work should be thoroughly studied by all and sundry who are concerned in the produce or sale of an article so valuable in itself, both for its exquisite flavour and for its valuable medicinal properties, as is coffee.

BURMA.

PURSUING our design of dealing in succession with the States surrounding India, and having in our last issue referred to our relations with Nepal, the next important State is the Kingdom of Burma, important for many reasons—primarily, perhaps, on account of its position. The British Government of India, though among the best in the world, can hardly be praised as a model of consistency (though it contrasts, in this respect, more than favourably with the Government at home). But, despite many inconsequences, it has always been consistent in one point of policy. Rightly or wrongly, it has always been its maxim that Native States were to be excluded from the seaboard. In pursuance of this maxim we have deprived Burma of every inch of coast which it ever possessed. In Hindostan we have left Goa to the Portuguese, and Pondicherry and another place or two to the French, though these are all insignificant harbours, and are really the exceptions which prove the rule. This rule was that no European Power should have access by sea to any Indian possessions but our own. In Burma we have left no Goa or Pondicherry; we have removed the frontiers of the State hundreds of miles inland. It has no access to the sea except through our territory.

Had Burma been thus treated—supposing such a performance possible—in the most amicable way, let us say by purchase, or by a “sacred covenant,” some irritation would, in due course of time, inevitably have been felt. But not only was this loss of much-prized territory the result of war, not only have we not “dissembled our love” for the Burmese, but we have emphatically kicked them downstairs, and kept them there with a foot on their necks. Our language to them has always been in the imperative mood. We have no cause to wonder that the Burmese Court, no matter by whom ruled, has always been in a state of something more than sub-acute discontent.

The natural result has been that, being thoroughly disgusted with us, they have turned to other quarters. For years past the most influential European in the capital, Mandalay, has been anybody but an Englishman. We had a soi-disant Frenchman with an Italian name, we have had others, all men, so far as is known, of low character. In fact, Mandalay has become a sort of pagoda-tree for Europeans, the sole qualification required being that they shall not be English. It needs no servid imagination to picture the various intrigues which would be rife at a court like that of Theebaw, or even at that of his more rational predecessor.

It is a common weakness to court a man in proportion to his wealth. Something analogous is visible in the dealings of States with each other. Now it so happens that Burma is naturally an exceptionally wealthy country, and the extent of commerce which might be carried on with it can hardly be exaggerated. The list of its products seems endless. Tea is indigenous, as might be expected in a country bordering on China and Assam. Of rice there are 102 kinds. Maize, millet, wheat, tobacco, and indigo, flourish. The potato, known as the stranger's or foreigner's root, is largely cultivated in the Kakhien Province, on the Burmo-Chinese frontier. Teak, and “almost every description of timber known in India is,” says Dr. Hunter, “produced in the forests,” from which, also, caoutchouc has of late years been largely exported.

In minerals the country is well known to be exceptionally rich. Gold, silver, copper, tin, lead, antimony, bismuth, and more than it is needful to enumerate, are found in profusion, along with sapphires and other precious stones; and, lest aught should be wanting, we are informed by Mr. Webster that iron is found “in several places,” and that the mountainous districts of the Shan territory “contain almost all the other metals.” Sulphur, natron, and salt are not deficient, while statuary marble, equal to the best Italian specimens, is found about fifteen miles north of the capital and east of the Irawadi. Of petroleum there is a superabundance, which ought for ever to relieve India from the necessity of importing it from more distant quarters. “On the banks of the Irawadi,” we read, “are” (in one district) “upwards of one hundred pits or wells, with a general depth of from 210 to 240 feet. . . . The liquid appears to boil up from the bottom like an abundant spring, and is extracted in buckets.”

Productiveness is comparatively useless unless you can turn into money, or its equivalent, the produce which you do not yourself require. We know how often, and how recently, in the East, it has happened that grain and other articles, indispensable to human existence, have been rotting in one place, while the inhabitants of another, a few score miles away, were dying of starvation. That the same thing constantly happened in Europe in mediæval times is matter of history. In each case the cause was the imperfection of the communications.

Now there are no means of communication in a country unprovided with railways, which even approximate, in the inexpensive facilities which they offer for commerce, with those which nature has furnished in rivers. Burma is exceptionally well provided with these outlets for its produce. Not to speak of the Irawadi and the Salween, which rank among the large rivers of the world, and their affluents, Burma possesses three considerable streams, with tributaries innumerable. Few parts of the globe are more abundantly supplied with water communication. Yet external commerce there is next to none.

Though in a manner tributary to China, to the Emperor of which, elephants, among other articles, are more or less regularly sent, ostensibly, Mr. Colquhoun says, as presents, the Ruler of the kingdom of some 200,000 square miles, with a population of some three and a-half millions, and a revenue (including payments in kind and forced labour) of about a million sterling, is nominally independent as regards matters of external relations. China on the East, England on the West, would, in their own interests, check any more than usually outrageous freak of political insanity. But we have no Treaty right to do so on any other ground.

As regards the internal administration, the King is autocratic, and has usually (we are not now speaking of the present maniacal tyrant, but also of his predecessors) employed his authority in order to oppress, rather than to benefit, his subjects. Wholesale massacres, torture, judicial and arbitrary, of the most appalling kind, are every-day occurrences; nor do we probably know the half of those which actually take place. The taxes "are in general rude and ill-contrived expedients for extortion, and are vexatious to the people at the same time that they are little productive to the State." Many are farmed—not infrequently lands are assigned to officials in lieu of salary, or to Court favourites in place of pension," and this assignment conveys a right to tax the inhabitants according to the discretion of the assignee." No wonder that, in spite of all precautions, and of the most barbarous punishment in case of detection, Burmese flock in shoals to British Burma, where they are at least free from the rapacity of tax-farmers, from inhuman punishments, and from gross oppression.

Each of these immigrants brings with him some tale of governmental misdoing, has but one story, Why do you suffer all this zulum? The answer is, that we are not to remedy violence by violence, but by influence.

Had our relations with Burma been, for years past, even tolerably "friendly" (as Aitchison's Treaties told us), our Resident might have been a very considerable personage at Mandalay. Commanding, as we do, the mouths of all the rivers, the main commercial outlets of the State, we could, to begin with, exercise a pressure almost analagous to that of a tourniquet on a shattered limb. And it would, were it necessary, be justifiable to apply this pressure in the first instance; though it should be withdrawn so soon as it had fulfilled its purpose. This may be necessary while Theebaw reigns, though we incline to a different opinion.

The panacea among our officers in British Burma is annexation, which would most obviously be doing evil that good might come. We think otherwise. Even with a maniac like Theebaw, a Resident of exceptional qualifications might obtain some kind of personal ascendancy. But he must be "resident" with a small as well as with a big R; he must be prepared to put up with a good deal when he has to encounter a being worse than Ivan the Terrible of Russia.

And, to a single-minded man, of good diplomatic ability, the post ought not to be one from which, in his country's interest, he should shrink. He ought to have a high salary and great latitude as regards the "giving of gifts."

The matter is of far more importance than official people, as a rule, recognise. Pressed in and constantly irritated by us, the late Burmese king ventured to "commit flirtation" with Italy and France. He has a treaty with both. A few thousand pounds would put Russia on the "most favoured Power" footing; that is, in the same position as the other two Powers.

(The Burman would have shown his teeth in this respect far more, a few years ago, had it not been for the late Sir John Kaye, who, recognising the value of unofficial intercourse, often entertained, and acquired much influence over, the Mengyee—an office ranking between a Secretary of State and an Ambassador—who headed a mission despatched by the late king, which was to do all sorts of things inimical to British interests.)

We seriously commend it to the attention of the Government of India whether it be not possible, instead of withdrawing our Resident in a huff, to act somewhat on the lines above indicated. If we have, even under Theebaw—and his successor will probably be more amenable to reason—no influence at Mandalay, some other European Power—whether France or Russia we know not—will have it. And if anyone wants to know what this portends, let him consult his Atlas.

OBITUARY.

WANT of space prevented our referring more particularly, last week, to the death of Sir Seymour FitzGerald, who, after filling—and ably filling—the post of Under-Secretary at the Foreign Office in Lord Derby's Administration in 1858–9, subsequently received, when the Conservatives resumed office, the appointment of Governor of Bombay, which he held for the usual five years (1867–1872). His Governorship was not remarkable for anything unusual, and on its termination he was appointed the head of the Charity Commission in England, a nomination which excited some needlessly unfavourable comments. It seems like going back to antediluvian times to call to mind that he took the Newdigate so far back as 1835. He was a staunch Conservative of the old school. In Parliament he never "showed up" much, but was a fair speaker, with more than an average power of marshalling his facts. His son, Mr. W. G. V. FitzGerald, has for many years held the post of Bear-leader to distinguished Indian visitors; or, in official phraseology, "Political A.D.C. to the Secretary of State for India."

COURTING in India amongst the Natives is romantic. When a husband is selected for a blushing maiden, the first endeavour of the latter is to catch a glimpse of her future spouse through the keyhole, in return for which, the enterprising damsel reveals her shadow to him in the verandah; further, if she can write, she contrives to write a billet-doux in his slippers, which are always left behind at the entrance of the house. Should the future husband wish to show his devotion, he partakes of refreshments in the house of his future father-in-law. This done, he cannot withdraw from his engagement.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JULY 14, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, June 23rd; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, June 21st.

THE Home events of the week, so far as they affect India, have not been of great importance. The negotiations with Russia drag their slow length along, but the firmness now at last shown on our side is likely to lead to a less evanescent, and better defined, arrangement, than would have been concluded by the late Government. The Russian Press is irate, but the bubble of its wrath will collapse when it is seen that nothing is to be gained by further inflating it.

WE are indebted to the Calcutta correspondent of the Times for the following extracts, which appear in to-day's issue of that paper:—

MESHER, July 7.

The Afghan Boundary Commission is now on the Zarmast Hills, some fifty miles north-east of Herat. The climate is charming, and the health of the party excellent.

The fortification of Herat is progressing, and if the Russians advance in September they will find Herat defended by from 15,000 to 20,000 men armed with breechloaders and provided with heavy artillery.

The English Consul's clerk has been released, but after undergoing such ill-treatment as is utterly unworthy of the servants of a civilised Power, that Power not being at war with England.

CALCUTTA, July 12.

Colonel Ridgeway's knighthood has given much satisfaction in India. It is felt to be a well-deserved recognition of the able manner in which he conducted the Commission from Quetta to the frontier, and of the skill and tact he displayed on many occasions when he was obliged to act independently of Sir Peter Lumsden.

The Indian public are anxiously awaiting the further development of the Anglo-Russian negotiations. While it is felt that it is now too late to undo many of the blunders of the last Ministry, there is a general feeling of confidence that the new Government will make the best of a bad business.

A London telegram of yesterday says that the establishment of a British cantonment at Candahar is contemplated, with the consent of the Ameer. If it be true that the place is to be reoccupied the measure will meet with general approval in this country. It is announced that the Pishin railway will be extended to the Khojak Pass, with a permanent bridge over the Lora river, thus bringing the terminus within eighty miles of Candahar. Perhaps it is not too much to hope that the rails will be laid over those eighty miles before long.

There is little news from Afghanistan. No further details are known as to the alleged revolt in Badakshan, but it is reported that three regiments have left Cabul for that province under Gholam Haidar Khan, commander-in-chief, with six heavy guns given by the British.

WE seem to be very differently thought of in Europe since we had a Government which knows its own mind, and is not afraid to speak it. A few words taken from a leader in Saturday's Times very well express the feeling among our German cousins. It is, says the writer, no secret that Prince Bismarck took little pains—nor can we blame him for it—to smooth the difficulties in the path of Mr. Gladstone and Lord Granville, or even to give them a word of encouragement. The result was, that Russia and France were both tempted to press hard upon England. Since Lord Salisbury has come into power a decided change is visible in the tone of German and Austrian opinion, and influences adverse to English interests will no longer be stimulated to activity by the demeanour of the two Empires of Central Europe. It is a change, not in the attitude of England towards other Powers, but in the attitude of other Powers towards her. Indeed, Prince Bismarck's complaint was, not that English policy had taken a direction of which he disapproved, but that, whatever line was taken, no consistency of principle, and no uniformity of action, were shown in following it out. He hopes to find that Lord Salisbury will show greater steadiness and firmness, and, for the sake of the peace of the world and the good fame as well as the interests of England, we trust those hopes may be realised.

Reis and Rayet thus summarises the situation as it lately was:—

There is a misery in Anglo-India, even to fighting between editors and their own correspondents. For Mr. Gladstone will on no account fight Russia. He knows what such a business means. Russia is one of the Great Powers, and a first-class military Empire. He was in office during the Crimean War, and remembers what an arduous, what a frightful thing it was. The Czar is not exactly the Mahdi—whom even he could not smash. So the rampant Britisher, ready to spring at the throat of the Great Northern Bear, must hide his diminished head. As for the loyal scribes who had, with more than British spite, been abusing the Russians, they are simply "sold." Only the "shoulder to shoulder" fighting Baboos must be in ecstasy at the situation which gives them such an opportunity "for tall talk." They are more than ever heroic and bold in their demands. They are crying for war still, every day with redoubled vehemence, and now they will call for the annexation of Muscovy. The Pioneer is in sackcloth and ashes. It tears its whiskers and beats its breast with all the sincerity of a Shiah during the Mohurrum. It is ashamed of ever having bragged of smashing the Czar. It will never again sing "Rule Britannia."

"That," as the Indian Daily News justly remarks, "is not pleasant reading. We commend it to our Home contemporaries." So do we to the Radical press.

THE United Service Gazette points out—what we must confess we did not previously know—that twenty-six members of the present Government—exclusive, of course, of the Lords of the Admiralty, whose professional qualifications are a sine quâ non of their appointment—are members of the regular or militia forces. All the better. Military or naval work, if done, like Opie's painting, "with brains," tends to sharpen the intellect, and—from experience in different lands—to enlarge its capacity. A Government of Service men (instead of one of tradesmen, drivelers, and dreamers), would never have allowed us to come to our present position, in which every Power in Europe flouts us with impunity.

BUT once set up an idol—let us say a divine figure—no sacrifice is too great to make to it. Did not the Philistines, and other nations, sacrifice their own children to Moloch?

THE late scare has, as a matter of course, led to a general "look back" on the part of some of our journals. Among other disinterred things are some remarks of the Prince Consort on the state of the Indian army, reprinted by a contemporary. They are well worth perusal, showing, as they do, very great foresight, to which justice may well be done, though the conditions of the case be somewhat altered.

Instead of the proper "chain of responsibility," the Prince Consort writes, "which is claimed for the system, it would seem more correct to characterise the system as one of perpetual counteraction and conflicting authorities. Can anything be more monstrous, for instance, in a military point of view, than the relative position of the Commander-in-Chief for India and the Commanders-in-Chief for Madras and Bombay, that the latter should be perfectly independent of the former in their respective presidencies as regards the Company's, or local forces, but subordinate to him as regards those of Her Majesty? And that the former, in the event of military operations near the frontiers of the different presidencies, should be absolutely powerless to combine his operations, as far as the co-operation of local troops is concerned, beyond the limits of Bengal, without the concurrence, previously obtained, of the Governor-General in Council and Commanders-in-Chief of the subordinate presidencies? . . . The great principles on which the efficiency of the military force in any country, and under any circumstances, must depend, are simplicity, unity, and steadiness of system, and unity of command."

WE see from a Circular sent us by Mr. Blackburn, the hon. sec. of the English Water Colour Exhibition in Boston, U.S.A., that the Cunard Company has most courteously promised to forward, carriage free, pictures (if duly protected by packing in the usual way) destined for the Exhibition. All particulars ascertainable from Mr. Blackburn, 103, Victoria-street. As Americans are known to be liberal, we have no doubt that the list of 500 drawings, to which the Exhibition is limited, will be speedily filled.

WE wonder if the rebuke which the elder Pitt administered to Mr. Moreton was present to the late Premier's mind when he blew that soap-bubble of a speech, of the hopes engendered by which so little could be realised when once the eleven millions had been obtained. It would have been well could he have followed Lord Melbourne's old hint, Can't you let it alone? But he could not. For he had spent the money!

Moreton happened to say in the House of Commons, "King, Lords and Commons, or (looking at the first Pitt), as that right honourable member would term them, "Commons, Lords and King." Pitt called him to order, and desired the words to be taken down. They were written down by the clerk. "Bring them to me," said Pitt, in his loftiest tone. By this time Moreton was frightened out of his senses. "Sir," he stammered out, addressing the Speaker, "I am sorry to have given any offence to the right honourable member or to the House. I meant nothing. King, Lords, and Commons—Lords, King, and Commons—Commons, Lords, and King; tria juncta in uno. I meant nothing; indeed I meant nothing." Pitt rose—"I don't wish to push the matter further. The moment a man acknowledges his error, he ceases to be guilty. I have a great regard for the honourable member, and as an instance of that regard, I give him this advice—whenever he means nothing I recommend him to say nothing."

WE mentioned in our last issue how anxiously Lord Salisbury's maiden speech as Premier was awaited. Though primarily concerning ourselves with Indian matters, we may say that it was on all points a manly, straightforward statement of policy in Egypt, and in Afghanistan; a plain, not a zigzag and intentionally deceptive, course, is to be pursued. And, above all, the British word once passed, is to be held sacred, which it assuredly never was considered by any one European Power to be during the last disastrous years. For every Minister in Europe knew that the arch-Casuist's Government would shuffle out of any promise they made, if "political" (that is, Parliamentary) expediency ever seemed to require it.

As regards Indian interests, we think that the key-note has been clearly struck. We are not, henceforth, to depend for our own protection and for that of our allies, on the promises of someone else, but on our own ability to defend what belongs to us and to them. Put yourself, as an individual, in the place of a State; what is good for one is not less so for the other. Fancy making a "sacred covenant" with a burglar not to attack your house, or your neighbour's, and, on the strength of it, neglecting your bolts and bars! Yet even this would be safer than to enter with Russia into engagements which you cannot enforce. For the burglar might, conceivably, keep faith. It is said (Bishop, of Bond-street, the great restorer—of course, for value received—of stolen dogs, used to say it,) that there is more honour than one would imagine—ce qui ne veut pas beaucoup dire—among thieves. Be it so, as regards petty thieves. They may keep faith. But Russia has never kept faith in any one transaction.

WE rejoice to see that our new Government have already done at least something to conciliate the goodwill of Europe. Most of the continental journals warmly praise the Premier's speech as manly and dignified. The general verdict is fairly expressed by the (demi-official) Presse of Vienna, which praises the speech as statesmanlike. The new Premier appears to be bent on distinguishing himself by firmness, the quality in which Mr. Gladstone was most deficient, and if he should succeed in proving that he always means what he says, whether he says little or much, he will have done a great deal to restore the damaged reputation of English statesmanship.

WE are much inclined to agree with a leading article in the Morning Post, that

The distinctive watchword of the new Government is that England must place her reliance for the defence of her possessions not on the positive assurances of other States to respect them, but upon her own ability to provide for their defence. And this, we may remark in passing, is the cardinal point of difference between the foreign policy of the late Government and of the late Opposition. The Conservative party were charged with Jingoism, and with a desire to embroil the country in foreign wars, because they manifested a distrust of the soundness of the policy which rested on a belief in the pacific assurances of Russia. Our contention, and it was verified by facts, was that confidence in pacific assurances was invariably misplaced, and that it invariably led to crises which placed this country on the brink of war.

THE hint conveyed in the subjoined extract from the—practically Russian—Political Correspondence of Vienna ought not to be thrown away on those who can read—as Opie said he mixed his colours—"with brains," and who remember the "arrangement" made as to the Afghan boundary. It was all, from the Russian side, arrêté beforehand. Lord Salisbury is only acting as a gentleman in saying that every British covenant shall be observed. But, as regards Russia, to paraphrase:—

If she may Find somewhat in the bond, 'tis hers, if nought,
Let her not seek't of us.

Give her not one inch of soil, not a grain of sand, which is not in the bond. But this is her talk:—

Lord Salisbury is credited with the intention of settling, in agreement with the Ameer of Afghanistan, a line of demarcation beyond which the Russians are to be required to promise that they will not trespass. Russia, says the writer, can accept no fanciful boundary traced in the sands. The frontier that will check her advances in Central Asia must be a rational one, based on ethnographical, geographical and strategical conditions. Such a frontier might be arranged by England and Russia in concert, but not by England in mere agreement with Afghanistan, and any scheme like that imputed to Lord Salisbury would compel the Russian Government to retract the concessions made to Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet, and as a further result would doubtless bring Russia and England to war.

WE are well pleased that Colonel Ridgeway has received a pat on the back, in the shape of a K.C.S.I., from the present Government. He would not have got it had he not in the opinion of his chief, Sir P. Lumsden, well deserved it. The conferment of an honour of this kind is a practical, and the best practical, reply to the insolent Russian insinuation that he had misled his Government as to the facts about Penjdeh, and that some Russian, or Caucasian, to whom falsehood is a trade, was to be believed in preference to him. Colonel Ridgeway may congratulate himself, as we do ourselves, on the change of Government. A Cabinet which was craven, wherever Russia was concerned, would never have dared to do such a thing without telegraphing to St. Petersburg, whence, indeed, they had to procure the "authorised" interpretation of their own despatches.

It was a graceful and characteristic act on the part of Lord John Manners to request his predecessor to inaugurate the new Indian Parcels Post, the arrangements for which had been perfected under his régime, though designed during the incumbency of the late Mr. Fawcett. Pleasant speeches were made, the photographs of the company taken, and general satisfaction expressed. Such amenities tone down the unavoidable asperities of political controversy, and we believe that in no country but in England would such a scene have been possible between political adversaries of the most prononcé kind. Not always in England. No one who has read Mr. Hayward's charming Essays will forget how a historical friendship was, on a strong difference of political opinion, dissolved "amid tears and stormy reproaches," to use Macaulay's description of the occurrence.

Reiss and Rayyet remarks:—

Another patriarch the less! After seventy-five weary years of activity, Mr. William Austin Montrieu, barrister-at-law, has gone to his rest. He was a genuine Englishman—one of the ablest, bravest, most honourable, most generous and unselfish of frail mortals.

Peace, say we, to the remains of a real gentleman, one of the olden kind!

We gladly print the subjoined. The Sepoy regiments in Egypt have been made brewers of wood and drawers of water, yet Osman Digma never surprised their sentries, nor penetrated their lines, though he did both over and over again (if we are to believe our war correspondents) in the "European" part of the camp. The Bombay Gazette, from which paper we reprint the letter, says that it has every reason to believe it genuine:—

TO THE EDITOR SAHEB, "MOOMBAREE GAZETTE."

SAR,—Your own correspondent letter dated Saukim, May 16, say your correspondent "J.M.M." remarks it is useless to suppose Sepoy regiments can do the work of European soldiers in Saukim. Who this "J.M.M." is? I think he no military man. He got no nolage of Native sepoy. He no read nothing what General Chief Woolsee Saheb and Gram Saheb Badoor say of my brother sepoy. WHAT nice companions the Wagogos must be! They are said to rub their bodies with rancid butter or faute de mieux with castor oil, and they never wash till they are dead. They are, however, evidently a clever race: seeing, for the first time, all the wonderful watches, guns, pistols, and compasses which modern civilisation can command, they naturally thought that "white faces" of such overwhelming ability could invent a medicine the partakers of which would live for ever!

In a dry tropical climate, whenever you find butterflies, water is pretty certain not to be far distant. These creatures are more appreciated in hot regions than in the cooler domains of England.

CASUISTRY seems the order of the day. An Eastern chieftain, on being reproached with his connection with the slave trade, admitted that the traffic in human beings was a bad thing, but said he, "I never sold one, I only buy them!"

The Parsi community having announced their intention of consecrating a recently-constructed Tower of Silence wherein to allow the bodies of those who die in the faith to lay exposed to the elements of Heaven, the worthy country folks around bade their children stay at home the day, fearing lest they should be placed as victims on the funeral Tower. This is the outcome of more than two centuries of rule and enlightenment.

PEOPLE are speaking ill of the monsoon. It does not behave itself as a well-conducted, properly-educated monsoon ought to do; it is "fickle, inscrutable, and inconstant." Could not some Radical in the House introduce a motion that it be abolished on the score of naughtiness?

THE Natives of India are not backward, "when so disposed," in the noble art of pilfering. The amount of liquor fraudulently removed from the Bengal Government distilleries in a year amounts to the enormous figure of about 500,000 gallons, entailing a loss of revenue to the extent of about £100,000 sterling; this, be it recollected, in one Province alone. It is gratifying, however, to find that the consumption is very inconsiderable—one-sixteenth of a gallon in the year; yet zealous bigots want it to be believed that the country is riddled with dram-drinking schoolboys and intoxicated old women.

THE newly-appointed Resident at Khatmandu has been honoured with a review, when Nepalese troops to the extent of 15,000 men marched past and saluted the British Representative. Surely Russia might find this an excuse for annexing the land of the Goorkhas?

THE Anti-Opium Society should "mark, learn, and inwardly digest" the fact that, in a hospital in Bengal there are at the present moment five natives under treatment for insanity, produced by smoking "ganja," a preparation of hemp. Corollary: human beings will indulge in stimulants in some form or another. Query?—Is opium the most baneful? We trow not, by a long way.

THE contagion of South Kensington is spreading. His Highness the Sultan of Muscat is going to inaugurate promenade concerts in his capital. This is good news for Strauss's band, the Pomeranians, and the other foreigners who honour us with their presence. What about our money?

SLAVERY is said to be looking up in the Persian Gulf and East African Coast. So much for the wisdom of those in high places who abolished the Indian Navy.

THE French are in despair at Burma. Their Envoy wishes to visit the King, booted and spurred, but the swarthy lord of all the umbrella carrying races flatly refuses to receive the Red Republican, save in his stockings!

THE Municipal Commissioners of Calcutta are a most enthusiastic body of men. They attend meetings, vote for improvements, order hedges, roads, gardens, and everything which can conduce to comfort and health; but when the time comes to provide the wherewithal, to meet the cost of these little businesses, they are silent—not a rupee will they pull out of their pockets! So matters do not progress very rapidly.

THE Anti-Vaccinationists ought to take a turn in Africa, and see whole villages laid waste by small-pox. There, at least, is a fair field for the disease in all its natural purity; there is not even a suspicion of "vaccination." And what is the result? The evidence should be quoted in the House by Mr. Peter Taylor.

Who is Mr. P. Szezefowski? He says that by the 31st of August, 1885, Russia will have made an attempt to seize Kandahar. This, be it added, was written before the change of Ministry.

THE Burmese, who are very superstitious, have for some time been wandering about at nights "rope-pulling" (alias "tug-of-war"), to induce the South-West monsoon to commence work in earnest. The fun is not confined to one sex or age. "Young men and maidens, old men and children," alike enjoy the sport. Of course the weather cannot resist such importunities.

It is argued that if Hindu remarriage were sanctioned many a faithless matron would get rid of her husband in order to have an opportunity of starting afresh on the matrimonial coach. Not a very high compliment to the fair ladies of that faith.

What a mixture of trades—"Sculptor and under-taker!" Such was the late Mr. Trotter of Tanjore. But there is a coincidence before being disposed of for ever—you can be immortalised in the form of a Bust.

To act—on one's first appearance on the stage—the part of the blushing housemaid must be somewhat embarrassing. It is not too many of the fraternity who can succeed in that line themselves. So Driver Tayler at Bellary must be a clever fellow!

In the choice of a wife "it is not the beauty of the skin that should be looked to, but the beauty of the heart." Doubtless. Still how is the inquiry to be conducted? It is difficult enough to find good, honest, unadulterated skin, but to examine a fair charmer's heart is still more perplexing.

THE Good Templars on the occasion of a wedding get a "wee bit" merry—but it is the intoxication of joy! Sceptics would have fancied the ginger-beer had a tinge of spirits to take off the edge.

As some ladies were on their way to "Ooty," to see the fun of the hunt, the horse they were driving conceived a desire to join in the sport, with a result that ladies and vehicles came to an untimely end. Fortunately no injuries befell the fair maidens, though the cart did not fare so happily.

LORD DUFFERIN has been dancing at Simla to the great delight of the regular habitués, who have not for many a year had a Viceroy who tripped the "light, fantastic toe." But the Viceregal step is pronounced old-fashioned, being that known in the salons as the "double-shuffle." The "makes-up," too, are said to be something marvellous, but the criticism thereon is cutting. "Time unaided is cruel enough to women, but time assisted by art deals a double blow." The only drawback to the Birthday Ball at Simla was the floor, which had been so badly prepared that one young lady was heard to declare that she "felt like a fly in a gluepot."

LIFE AND WORKS OF ALEXANDER CSOMA DE KÖRÖS.*

All gifts, St. Paul tells us, are given by one and the same Spirit, dividing to everyone severally as He will. Of all gifts none is perhaps rarer than that of travelling to one's own profit and that of one's fellow-creatures. That a poet is born, not made, has passed into a proverb. Poets—we do not of necessity count every Laureate as a poet—are rare. We think that a born traveller is even rarer. The list of them can be counted on one's fingers. Mungo Park, Bruce, Palgrave, Livingstone, Stanley, Vambéry, will occur to everyone as among the brightest examples in modern times.

We are inclined to place Csoma de Körös, too often ignored, above all whom we have named. His career is unique. Rising from no high family, he proved himself a traveller of rare calibre in lands never visited by any European, and made his mark as one of the most self-devoted explorers and linguistic students of any age. Dr. Duka, a countryman, if we mistake not, of Körös, has done well in calling attention to his exceptional merit.

The position of Tibet, as conterminous with so much of our Northern and North-Eastern Frontier, and its peculiar political status of semi-dependence on, and semi-independence of, China, render it a most interesting subject of study; and it is one of the many proofs of the marvellous political foresight of Warren Hastings that, long before Darjeeling was anything but a cluster of huts, long before Bhotan or Sikkim were regarded as States with which the British Government were in any way necessarily concerned, that greatest of Governors-General took serious measures to open up friendly communications with Lhasa. That his overtures were most cordially received is matter of history; that an amicable intercourse with Tibet could have all along been maintained, common-sense tells us. It did not affect the Chinese in Hastings' time, nor could they, had it been kept up, now object to it. Now that we are renewing it, after so long an interval that it seems an entirely new thing, we must not be surprised at their not giving us credit for entirely disinterested motives if we push our way into Tibet. Yet the Tibetans themselves are not unfriendly, as Sir D. Forsyth and "Khoten" Johnson proved.

Csoma de Körös, the son of a Transylvanian in by no means easy circumstances, was born in 1784, and, after hard study in his own country, during which he manifested great linguistic ability, and special predilection for Oriental tongues, resolved on visiting the cradle of the human race. The design, when formed, was carried out with a kind of independent secretiveness, if the expression be permissible, which seems to have been a marked feature, in a very pronounced character. Walking one morning with his friend, the Oriental professor, Hegedüs, who knew of his design, and inquired when he proposed starting, the young man, who had abandoned the prospect of a professorial chair and the certainty of a private tutorship, in single-minded devotedness to the one future object of his life, quietly turned to the Professor with the words, "I have started already, and only wanted your company in the first stage." This from a lightly-clad pedestrian, with only a stick in his hand and some ten pounds in his pocket, was un peu fort, and the worthy Professor was not a little amazed. Csoma had begun, as if going for a mere jaunt, a journey destined to lead him through Turkey and Egypt, Persia, Bokhara, Afghanistan, Kashmir, and the Punjab (then under the iron rule of Ranjit); finally to the wilds of Tibet, with his studies in which, his name will ever be associated. Dr. Duka waxed wroth at the idea that Csoma went on a sort of wild-goose chase in search of a language, the similarity of which to the Hungarian was to show it to be the origin of his native tongue, and, therefore, presumably, an indication of the locality of the cradle of his race. This may not have been, and, apparently, by no means was, his primary aim; but, had it been so, it was surely not a blamable object of ambition. Nor would it have been, seemingly, at all out of keeping with the character of the man. What would the world have been without enthusiasts? And Csoma was an enthusiast quand même. He was eminently qualified for the work of a linguistic explorer. Both at Nagy Enyed, in Hungary, and at the well-known headquarters of Oriental study, the University of Göttingen, celebrated by Canning's allusions, he had distinguished himself in Asiatic tongues. If he did not know the seventy odd languages with which Cardinal Mezzofanti was credited, he undoubtedly knew those with which he was acquainted much more profoundly than did that somewhat phenomenal linguist. If his English letters are to be taken as specimens of his knowledge of other languages besides our own, his acquaintance with them must have been singularly precise, and his intonation of them must have been faultless indeed to admit of his passing, almost penniless, and without powerful friends, yet unscathed, through so many lands, where human life is of not the slightest value.

* "Life and Works of Alexander Csoma de Körös." A Biography compiled chiefly from hitherto unpublished data. By Theodore Duka, M.D., F.R.C.S.E., Surgeon-Major of H.M.'s Bengal Medical Service, &c. London; Trübner and Co. 1885.

Csoma's own account of himself is modest enough:—

"He cannot," he says himself in the preface to his Tibetan Dictionary, "be accounted of the number of those wealthy European gentlemen who travel at their own expense for pleasure and curiosity; being rather only a poor student, who was very desirous to see the different countries of Asia, as the scene of so many memorable transactions of former ages; to observe the manners of several peoples, and to learn their languages, . . . and such a man was he, who, during his peregrinations, depended for his subsistence on the benevolence of others. . . . As my parents," he tells us, "were dead, and my only brother did not want my assistance, I resolved to leave my native country, and to come towards the East, and by some means or other procuring subsistence, to devote my whole life to researches which may be afterwards useful to the learned world of Europe in general, and, in particular, may illustrate some obscure facts in our own history."

It is gratifying to remember that, from his arrival in Teheran, this subsistence was all but entirely derived from our own countrymen and our own Government. Csoma's journey to Ladak had occupied him (allowing for a short residence in Egypt to study Arabic, another stay of four months in Teheran to learn Persian, and one or two involuntary detentions en route) nearly four years, almost the entire distance being performed on foot. Some eighteen months elapsed ere he finally settled down to undertake the acquisition of an exhaustive knowledge of Tibetan, which he did in, or near, the Monastery of Yangla.

His course of preliminary study ended, he sought out Mr. Moorcroft, the celebrated traveller and numismatist, to whom he gave the written promise that, if the Government would support him in his studies, "he would stand faithful to his engagements to study and be diligent in his researches." The Government, after some delay, gave him a stipend of fifty Rs. a month, and he spent the next ten years of his life in working hard at Tibetan, then, and perhaps still, almost an unknown tongue. He lived among the Lamas almost as one of themselves, but he was met in his retirement by one or two travellers who were the first to arouse the interest of the general public in his career. Dr. Gerard, who was trying to introduce vaccination into those remote parts, describes him as a singular union of "learning, modesty, and greasy habits," taking interest in nothing except his literary associations. In summer he inhabited a cottage, all the furniture in which consisted of two rustic benches and a couple of ruder chairs. In the winter, Csoma, the Lama, and an attendant, "were circumscribed in an apartment nine feet square for three or four months; they durst not stir out, the ground being covered with snow, and the temperature below the zero of the scale. There he sat, enveloped in a sheep-skin cloak, with his arms folded, and in this situation he read from morning till evening without fire, or light after dusk, the ground to sleep upon, and the bare walls of the building for protection against the rigours of the climate."

Solitude seems to have intensified the peculiarities of his character. When first he was heard of at Lahore, some inquiry had been made regarding the object of the visit of the mysterious foreigner, and it would seem that the intrepid but eccentric traveller never altogether forgot or forgave this. So resentful was he of the slightest appearance of suspicion, that, whenever a polite inquiry was made as to his progress, he seems to have taken it as a kind of imputation that he was not fairly earning his stipend, and forthwith returned the money. (Throughout the whole period of seven years he spent about £2 a month!)

By this time his fame had spread, his friends in Hungary raised a subscription. Csoma sent the money back to found an Oriental scholarship at his old college at home. Nor did the Asiatic Society of Bengal fare better at his hands. They resolved to add another fifty rupees to the monthly allowance made by Government. Csoma declined the offer promptly; they had taken no notice of a letter in which he had asked for the loan of some books, and he would have nothing to do with any money of theirs.

However, at length, in 1831, the magnum opus, a "Dictionary and Grammar of Tibetan," was finished, and brought by the indefatigable student to Calcutta. Here his labours did not cease. Before the work could be printed, a complete fount of Tibetan type had to be cast; this had to be superintended by him, and three more years elapsed ere, at length, the precious volumes made their appearance. The Government doubled his allowance—what a wretched pittance for a man of such unique merit!—and the Asiatic Society of Bengal gave him rooms, and the title of Assistant Librarian. His life in Calcutta is thus described:—"I never saw," says M. Schöft, a countryman of his own, "a more strange man than him. He lives like a hermit among his Tibetan and other works, in the house of the Asiatic Society, which he seldom leaves. Of an evening he takes slight exercise in the grounds, and then he causes himself to be locked up in his apartment." Another friend, M. Pavie, adds, "I saw him often during my stay in Calcutta, absorbed in phantastic thoughts, smiling at the course of his own ideas, taciturn like the Brahmins, who, bending over their writing-desks, are employed in copying texts of Sanskrit. His room had the appearance of a cell, which he never left except for short walks in the corridors of the building."

Tired, as it would seem, of the restraints of civilised life, he contemplated yet another Central Asian journey, and actually reached Darjeeling. But labour and privation had done their work, and a fever which (still travelling on foot) he had contracted in the Terai, carried him off at the age of fifty-eight.

Dr. Duka has made the most of the very scanty materials for anything like a life of this wonderful man which alone are available. But they are lamentably meagre. Csoma, an exceptionally self-contained person, seems never to have imagined that his own journeyings would, or indeed could, interest the public. Essentially a student, with one aim, he put aside everything else. Nor does he seem, even in Calcutta, to have abated one jot of his singular reserve.

The volume confirms our former impression, that, had Emerson desired to include in his admirable "Representative Men" the portrayal of an ideal traveller, Csoma would have been, or should have been, his selection.

Dr. Duka has produced a very interesting and valuable book, which every student may read and perpend with advantage.

A word as to the appendices, which contain a list of our traveller's published writings. The small comparative vocabulary of words in Sanskrit, Hindi and Hungarian, at p. 217, is suggestive, without claiming to be complete. We caution readers who value the integrity of their teeth against attempting to pronounce the Tibetan verses on pp. 192, 3, 5, and we recommend to physiognomists the portrait of Csoma (one of the most characteristic we have ever seen) prefixed to the book.

MAHABLESWAR gaities only merit notice for the peculiar race termed "Death or Glory Stakes," when an indiscriminate mob of gentlemen in fancy costumes, mounted on every conceivable kind of animal, ride round the course for their very lives. The scene must indeed be laughable and quaint.

Russian is said to be a very difficult language; it is now explained that it is quite simple to those who know Persian Pushtoo, French, German and English!

A YOUTH of twenty summers when indicted before the magistrate at Bombay for publishing an indecent book, pleaded that it was his first attempt at authorship, and he did not know how to cater for the public. Perhaps a journal in this metropolis may have given him a few hints.

MADRASSEES are funny beings. The swimming baths in the People's Park are, strange to say, in the charge of an attendant himself unable to swim. Result:—A boy fell into the deep part of the bath, and the man placed there to rescue him ran away for help; when he returned the lapless stripling was gathered to his fathers.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JULY 14, 1885.

BHOOTAN.

THE late insurrection in Bhotan, commonly written Bhootan, has attracted unwonted attention to the little State, which, nestling among the dense Sub-Himalayan forests and jungles, would seem as far out of the world as heart could desire.

Bhootan, containing 20,000 square miles, and, approximately, some 30,000 inhabitants, entertains, like other Buddhist States (Siam being, perhaps, the only exception on the Continent of Asia), a marked objection to intercourse with Europeans. Our envoys have usually been received on the willy-nilly principle; we can't help ourselves. There is the further peculiarity, of which Tibet and Siam are examples on a larger scale, of a sort of double Government, spiritual and secular. In times when Garibaldi was not, and when Rossi had not been sent à la lanterne, the Pope used, as we all know, to combine both the spiritual and secular headship of the State, just as the Czar, or Tsar, of Russia, does to this day.

But most Buddhist States have gone on exactly the opposite tack; they have put the headship of the Church—if we may so call their religious ideas—under one head, and that of the State under another. That in Tibet these two co-ordinate authorities should be termed Lamas, and in Bhootan (Dharm and Deb) Rajahs, is a matter of detail. In Japan their appellations are entirely different from each other, and have no such connecting link as Lama or Rajah.

But it would seem that in Bhootan le Roi règne mais il ne gouverne pas. Practically there is no Government. The Dharm Raja, supposed to be an incarnation of the Deity, is usually a child, chosen by his prearranged recognition of the cooking utensils of his predecessor. He passes his youth in a monastery, and, when he emerges from it, on attaining his majority, he exercises no more authority than he did in his infancy. Evidently the Bhootanese do not believe in monastic teaching. The Deb (secular) Raja his the mere nominee of whichever provincial Governor chances to be the most powerful.

Bhootan resembles most Sub-Himalayan States in having its Terai, or dense jungle belt (of which more anon), a natural consequence being that elephants abound; so much so, indeed, as to render the jungle—especially in what we should call the “rutting” season—positively dangerous.

There seems little to be said in favour of the Bhooteas, except that they are physically a fine, stalwart race. Living in houses (entirely built of wood—not a scrap of iron being used) of three or four stories, or in cottages, exactly resembling Swiss chalets, even to the large stones on the shingles of the roof, they have no good reputation. “I have never yet known,” says Captain Pemberton, “a people so wholly degraded as the Bhooteas.” For a good deal of this their so-called Government is responsible. Whenever we think of the Bhootan “Government” we call to mind the celebrated “Chapter XIII.—Snakes in Norway. There are no snakes in Norway.” Assuredly, there is no Government in Bhootan.

“Nothing that a Bhutia possesses is his own,” said our Envoy in 1864. “There never was, I fancy, a country in which the doctrine of ‘might is right’ formed more completely the whole and sole law and custom of the land. No official receives a salary. He has certain districts made over to him, and he may get what he can out of them; and the more he extorts, and the more he sends to his superior, the longer his tenure of office.” One trait is very characteristic. The people “do not care to extend their cultivation, as an increased revenue is exacted in proportion to land cultivated, but devote their whole energies to make the land yield twice what it is calculated (of course by the local revenue collector) to produce.”

The peculiar position of Bhootan has affected (what it seems a misnomer to call) its politics, as geographical circumstances have affected those of more important States. Situated chiefly on the hills, its population has naturally gravitated to the plains, as the Huns of old, and the Germans and Swiss of mediæval times, used inevitably to find their way to the sunny slopes and fertile valleys of Italy. “At the time when the inhabitants of Punakka (the winter residence of the Rajas) are afraid of exposing themselves to the blazing sun, those of Ghasa,” says Dr. Hunter, “experience all the rigour of winter, and are chilled by perpetual snows. Yet these places are within sight of each other.” We can hardly wonder, that the denizens of the one and the other long for a somewhat less extreme climate, and this they have found in the Dooars or Dwars (a word signifying passes), the south-western slopes of which, and the lands adjacent to them, are strictly within our own territory. These have, from time immemorial, been occupied by people whose real home is the little Native State, but whose presence in our territory has afforded the Bhootanese a pretext—quite analogous to that of the Russians to all territory on which a Saryk-Turkoman has ever pastured a cow, and quite as sustainable—to the Dwar districts, as an integral portion of their dominions. And, not content with occupying the Dwars, they invaded the adjacent British districts, massacring, or carrying off into slavery, the inhabitants.

The possession of these Dwars, which, as the natural outlet of Bhootan to the plains of Bengal, are, as a matter of course, much coveted by the Bhootan Government, has always been the bone of contention between us and them. Right to them the Bhootanese have none; but we have assuredly let them believe that they possess

one. Indeed, all our "arrangements" with these people have been of an abnormal character. As to one group of the Dwars, for instance, it was "held alternately four months by the British Government, and eight months by the Booteahs, each year." Could any rational being expect such an "arrangement" not to lead to dispute?

After endless controversy the Hon. Ashley Eden, a brother, if we remember aright, of the "Lord Sahib Ka Miss" (so well known for her sketches, and her uniform courtesy, when Lord Auckland was Governor-General), was sent in 1863 as Envoy to Bhootan to demand reparation for the outrages above referred to. Not only did he not get it, but "was subjected to the grossest insults, and, under compulsion, signed a treaty yielding the disputed territory, and making other concessions to the Bhootanese"—concessions, of course, instantly disavowed.

We have never thought that this outrage was sternly enough resented. When the toga of the Roman envoy was besmirched with filth in the public assembly at Tarentum he turned to the people with the ominous words: "Men of Tarentum, it will take much blood to wash this gown." The confiscation of the Dwars, coupled with the regranting of some £5,000 (representing a large share of the revenue which they had yielded) was hardly the kind of punishment which should have been awarded for the scandalous personal violence offered to an envoy. At all events, we have bound the Bhootan Government to us by chains of gold.

Coercion (which might have been more severe) in the first instance, followed by very great liberality subsequently, has here, at any rate, borne good fruit. This is not the only State towards which kindly consideration, preceded, if needful—but only if needful—by a manifestation of power, the meaning and force of which it is impossible to mistake, may with advantage be shown; and this is a subject to which we may have to recur.

HONOURS.

WE duly reported the honours—so far as they related to India—conferred on the occasion of the Queen's birthday, kept on the 6th ult. In the days of yore, when there were nothing but K.G. and K.B., and the three divisions of the Order of the Bath were unknown, decorations were of the very highest value. Like the Prussian order Pour le mérite (Verdienst-Orden), which even the King cannot wear till he has won it, the Bath represented real service and a bittock more. Even then there was, as long as England was ruled by a King who was at the same time Elector of Hanover, the Guelph Order to fall back on. But this Order was given too indiscriminately, and, latterly, fell into something akin to disrepute. We well remember the old Navy story that William IV., sitting, as the genial old man loved to do, at the head of the table on board a man-of-war, said of a captain who had once been his flag-lieutenant, and who importuned him for advancement, "He pestered me so that I did not know what to do, so I made a K.H. of him." "Served him jolly well right, your Majesty!" roared an old admiral, covered with stars and medals, from the further end of the table.

Now, we must take care not to make our decorations thus cheap. Don't let them become like the French Legion of Honour, which a cynical Frenchman said (during the late Empire) that it was an honour to escape, nor like some of the German Orders (let us instance an Order of the "Inkstand with Ivy Leaves"), which infallibly fall to the lot of every German official.

Yet the Pioneer assures us that we are in India on the eve of this calamity. Regretfully agreeing in the main with the sentiments expressed, we are pleased, though a little bit surprised, to see them in so influential and almost authoritative a journal.

Observing that the one nomination which interested the public in the slightest degree was that of Colonel Bradford to the K.C.S.I., it proceeds to say:—

The K.C.S.I., it may be believed, will always be an object of wholesome ambition and a worthy reward. But as for the C.S.I. and C.I.E., it becomes every year increasingly apparent that they labour under all the inherent disadvantages of cheap distinctions that carry nothing with them. We will venture to say that there is scarcely a person in the whole list of the possessors of these decorations who can be considered at all honoured by holding them. On the contrary, when they are not given with the evident intention of maintaining the respectability of the rank, they are usually merely a somewhat invidious means of marking that the person who obtains them has not been approved for something better. . . . It is quite inconceivable, for instance, that anyone (like Mr. Hennessey in this instance) who can write after his name the letters F.R.S. should feel gratified at being allowed to add to them the C.I.E. It is absurd to suppose that by the time a man has gained a European reputation for Indian research he can be at all honoured if the Government, happening to become aware of it, visit him with a decoration which is, perhaps, in the same breath bestowed on a Public Works contractor, a Municipal Councillor, and a wealthy usurer whose remorse may have taken the form of public charity. . . . It is unfortunate that the Government does not seem to be at all aware of the estimation in which its minor honours are almost universally held when official conventionality is put aside. In bestowing them, it is much in the position of the uncle who "tips" the young man just leaving Eton with half-a-crown. It may be benevolent, but benevolence is not wanted, and the action puts both sides in a false position.

Much, indeed, for the Pioneer to admit, but perfectly true. The Pioneer does not suggest a remedy. We remember being appealed to by a late Governor-General's Agent in Rajpootana respecting the case of an English lady who had been silly enough to marry a native (ostensibly a gentleman, and certainly a person of good birth), whose brother-in-law, as she deposed on oath, had spat in her face. And this individual still wears the C.S.I. He ought to have been "kicked out of" the Order. By reducing greatly the number of nominations, by confining them to persons of really distinguished merit, instead of considering certain offices as pegs on which they are to be hung as a matter of course, something can be done. For instance, every Governor of a Presidency ought not, as a matter of course, to be made G.C.S.I. They are beginning to think it a slight if they are not so appointed! Every Lieutenant-Governor or Chief Commissioner expects the K.C.S.I. as a sort of appendage to his nomination. In these days, when deficits are the all but normal outcome of a budget both in England and in India, it is something to have a form of reward which costs nothing. But we depreciate its value by the very frequency of its bestowal. A griff would think much of a C.S.I. or a C.I.E. Ere he gets it he finds out its true value; it is like a knighthood here, given to some city tallow-chandler. The case of the C.I.E. is peculiarly unfortunate, for, originally intended mainly as a reward for literary service, it is scarcely ever bestowed upon men of letters.

Surely even a few years of less profusion in conferring decorations would enhance their value, and make them more precious to the recipients.

THE pleasures of married life are of course great. Not the least is to wake up in the morning and find your wife belying your head with a heavy pestle. This is the way they spend "a happy time in India."

THE first experiment of the Backerganj Municipality is not encouraging. The time-honoured way of destroying the pariah dogs which infest oriental towns was either by shooting or clubbing them, but the new magnates thought they could improve matters, so they ordered strychnine to be rubbed on meat and thrown in the streets—the result being that some of the dogs died, others went mad, and when in that state bit men, women and children indiscriminately. So several persons are in the hospital, and one has died. Who is responsible?

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JULY 20, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, June 30th; Calcutta and Madras, June 29th; Allahabad, June 28th.

SOME of the Native papers are beginning to realise Russia's real designs. Charuvarta speaks out plainly:—

No one will believe that the Russians have advanced so far with a view only to delimitate the Afghan frontiers. The object of Russia is to make the way clear for the invasion of India. The desire of the Russians for more territory is very strong. They know very well that they cannot occupy a bit of land in Europe without hard fighting, therefore they have no alternative but the invasion of India. There will be no cause for anxiety if the English and the natives of India can be of one heart. This advance of the Russians ought to be checked as soon as possible.

AND we confess to thoroughly agreeing with the Dainik:—

The more the English show their desire for peace, the more the Russians display their strong desire for war. The old Premier did not say anything when the Russians occupied Penjdeb, but that has not satisfied them. They want something more. From this it appears that the desire of Russia for a war is very strong, and that she will not be stopped without bloodshed.

As has been of late the case, we have to look for our latest Indian telegraphic news to the Calcutta correspondent of the Times. We extract the salient parts of his communication:—

The Russians are reported to be strengthening Penjdeb and to have appointed a new Governor of that place—a Yulatan Saryk.

The impression seems to gain ground in India that for the future British policy will not concern itself greatly about Herat, but will be rather directed to the making of such preparations as will enable us to take up, at the shortest notice, a position somewhat approximating to Lord Beaconsfield's "scientific frontier." The question is one for the strategist rather than the politician, and while undoubtedly many high military authorities attach the greatest importance to the possession of Herat others hold it wiser to establish ourselves strongly at Candahar and to meet the enemy on the Helmund. The intended extension of the railway to the Khojak Pass will put us within easy reach of Candahar, and it has been well suggested that the Ameer might be asked to give an earnest of his good will by making an earthwork from the British outpost at Chaman to Candahar. Such a work would enable our engineers to lay rails to the latter city in a fortnight after the order was given.

Nothing definite, however, is known in this country regarding the Afghan policy of the new Ministry. Whatever be thought of the merits of the question from a purely military point of view, the Government must seriously consider whether the occupation of Herat by Russia might not give a blow to British prestige which would more than counterbalance any advantage gained by fixing the first line of defence on the Helmund or further back.

If we are dilatory, not so our future adversaries: we have little idea of the extent of their preparations. The following paragraph from a letter in the Moscow Gazette, dated Tashkend, at the beginning of last month, gives some idea of the preparations already made for war in the Turkestan province. The writer says:—

War was considered here as irrevocably decided upon. It was even known what troops were to form the detachment from Turkestan. The battalions ordered from Tashkend were to be replaced by others from Viernoe. The latter started from Viernoe in great haste, and one of the battalions will enter this town to-morrow, followed by a regiment of Cossacks. Many local merchants have despatched transports of provisions along the expected track of the troops, and the officers have made preparations for the campaign by selling their furniture, purchasing horses, &c. Although the expected official orders did not follow, the Tashkend troops were quite ready to take the field in two or three days."

WE are truly sorry to have to abandon all hope of seeing an Indian team at Wimbledon. It seems incredible that the Government of India would not, if duly applied to, have found the paltry sum required to ensure a fair representation at the targets of our Indian Empire. That funds to any reasonable amount could have been obtained, with but little (but sufficiently early) canvassing, no rational man who knows the services can doubt; not to say that there is scarce a planter in India who could not "plant" a very fair succession of bull's-eyes. Illness no one can help; and we much regret the attack of fever from which Major Francis suffered, just at the most inconvenient time. But the phrase "emergency man" is surely not unknown in India? The whole thing seems to have been utterly bungled; and if we are, on the present occasion, to pass the Irish jury's verdict "Not Guilty," we assuredly append their rider "but don't do it again." With regard to the presence of a team of Volunteers to represent India in the match for the Kolapore Cup, the following communication was handed into the Press tent on Saturday:—

Advices from India received in camp conclusively show that the Indian team for Wimbledon this year has not left the shores of our Eastern dependency owing to want of support from the Indian Government. The team was selected by competition at 200, 500, and 600 yards, seven shots each distance, three trials, the aggregate scores going for place. Fifteen tried men were selected to represent India, but, as some were in the service of Government and could not obtain leave from their ordinary duties, others had to be put in by the managing committee. Everything was done for the furtherance of the project, but unfortunately at the last moment Major L. Francis, Punjab Volunteers, honorary secretary of the Indian Team Committee, was struck down by fever at Umballa, and was obliged to proceed to Simla for a change. This caused some delay, and at the last moment it was found that the team as a body could not be sent for want of funds. Calcutta offered 5,000 rupees towards the project, but owing to the short notice the balance could not be raised in time for the team to be embarked at Bombay. As a matter of fact, the Government rendered no assistance, though the Peninsular and Oriental Company offered to convey the team to and from Wimbledon at reduced fares. A few Indian volunteers at the camp desire to shoot for the Rajah of Kolapore's prize, not because they have any chance of success, or in any way anticipate that they may win, but simply to put in an appearance on behalf of India, more especially as the Rajah is now in England, and may possibly be induced to add éclat to the match by attending at Wimbledon on Wednesday next to witness the competition for the very handsome prize presented by his predecessor. The Indian team may be composed of "members, home on leave, of the Indian Staff Corps, or of the covenanted or uncovenanted Indian Service, or Indian Volunteers, or of all four."

THE subjoined account—a very encouraging one—of the performances of the Massilia, augurs well for the utility of the "converted cruisers":—

The Massilia, chartered by the Admiralty from the P. and O. Company to serve as an armed cruiser, has been fitted out at Sydney, N.S.W., and has undergone her steam and gun trials. The Sydney Morning Herald, alluding to the event, says:—"There were 120 officers and men from H.M.S. Nelson to work the guns on board. Everything was in perfect order, and the Massilia looked remarkably well as she steamed down the bay. After getting clear of the Heads the Massilia steered a S.E. course, and encountered a strong head wind and sea, so that the test was a severe one. The trip proves that the Massilia will be a most valuable and, in one sense, formidable addition to H.M.'s ships on this station. The firing lasted till half-past eleven. Captain Shallard, who was in command, and the officers of the ship, who have volunteered to serve in her under Government, then adjusted compasses. After luncheon the Massilia was steered for the Heads, which she entered at 3 P.M., mooring to the buoy in Neutral Bay at about 4. The Admiral expressed in fitting terms his satisfaction with the ship for the work in which she is to be engaged, and said the trial she had been submitted to was no ordinary one. Captain Nixon, an old Royal Naval Reserveman, and one well up in his drill, was present by invitation of the Admiral, and also expressed himself as highly pleased with the working of the ship."

WE reprint the following "skit" (fortunately no longer applicable) which we find in the columns of an Indian contemporary, who quotes it from the Morning News of Paris:—

SUAKIM TO BE GIVEN AWAY.—To be given away, to an eligible applicant, on the retirement of the present occupant, the whole of that most commodious seaport and commercial emporium, commonly known as Suakim, on the Red Sea Littoral, with all the appurtenances thereof, including twenty miles of railway, and the exclusive right of way by the shortest trade route to the Upper Nile, with water communication for two thousand miles into the heart of Central Africa. The right to dispose of this valuable and most coveted investment has been acquired by the present holder by a capital expenditure of several millions sterling. The water frontage is excellent, and the harbour accommodation, in which the largest ironclads can lie in security, commands the road to India. Intending occupants, who must be civilised, more or less, can have the whole of this desirable property, with all the appurtenances thereof, made over to them for nothing. Apply to Messrs. Gladstone, Granville, and Co., Downing street, London, where maps, plans, and full particulars may be obtained at any hour between ten and four.

MR. A. M. MARKHAM, C.S., writes to an up-country paper, calling attention to the fact that the root of Achyranthes Aspera affords almost instantaneous relief from the pain caused by the sting of a scorpion. The plant is very common everywhere, and is one of those whose clinging burrs are such a nuisance on one's legs when out shooting. The root macerated in water is applied to the part stung, and a small quantity is drunk in water. If this be done quickly, there is absolutely no pain half-an-hour or so after the sting, instead of the twelve to twenty-four hours of intense suffering which follow an untreated sting. Three cases occurred recently in Mr. Markham's camp, in which the sufferers, thanks to chirchirra and the presence of a khitmutgar who knew how to apply it, were going about their work within an hour in each case, feeling nothing more than numbness in the part stung.

APROPOS of the late scare, the following extract of a letter, written by the Queen's command, by the late Prince Consort, shortly before the Crimean war, is eminently worth reading. When will a strong nation learn to be always in such a state of preparation as to be free from scares? Can we not emulate the calm, self-confidence with which the Germans, in 1870, met the stupid French cry, "à Berlin."

THE letter is addressed to the then Prime Minister, Lord Aberdeen. Mr. Gladstone was a member of his Ministry, and would have done well to remember so striking a communication as that which we subjoin:—

"This is the third time during the Queen's reign that an apprehension of war and consequent panic about invasion have seized the public mind of this country. The Queen has witnessed on the previous occasions, that under the pressure of this panic hasty measures have been prepared by the Government and introduced into Parliament, but that before they had passed through the necessary parliamentary stages the panic had materially subsided, and the Government had consequently gradually arrived at the determination to leave the measures thus proposed inoperative.

"The Queen conceives that the same thing may happen in the present instance. She would seriously lament this, as she is of opinion that it is most detrimental and dangerous to the interest of the country that our defences should not be at all times in such a state as to place the empire in security from sudden attack; and that delay in making our preparations for defence till the moment when the apprehension of danger arises exposes us to a twofold disadvantage.

"1st. The measures will be necessarily imperfect and expensive, as taken under the pressure of the emergency and under the influence of a feeling which operates against the exercise of a cool and sound judgment.

"2nd. Our preparations will have to be made at a time when it is most important, for the preservation of peace, neither to produce alarm at home, nor by our armaments to provoke the Power with which we apprehend a rupture.

"In order to avoid this disadvantage, the Queen thinks that the measures now to be proposed to Parliament ought to combine the following requisites:

"1st, that they shall be really sufficient for the security of the empire; and 2nd, that their nature be such as to warrant the expectation that the community will not become disinclined to uphold them during long periods of peace and confidence on account of their expensive or oppressive character.

"The Queen would wish, therefore, that a statement showing the whole of our means at present available, both naval and military, and the various modes in which it is proposed to augment and improve them for the future, should be laid before her, in order that she may be able to judge how far the separate measures in contemplation are likely to realise the desired objects, and to accord with each other as parts of a general and permanent system."

It is not so very long since Lord Northbrook told us, in his usual flippant manner, that, were he trusted with two millions for the benefit of the Navy, he would not know what to do with them. Just as we have heard a child say, "Don't give me that twopence, mamma, I may lose it." We find that the child had quite accurately gauged his own (in)capacity to know what to do with money. Not to say that he had to ask, within a few months of making this notorious speech, for some millions in order to render efficient the Navy which, according to his own account, was in such splendid condition (ask Sir Geoffrey Hornby what that condition is), he cannot manage eight and a-half millions, and got into a kind of turkey-cock style when asked to account for them. Lord Harrowby must have had his temper well under control when he, "on behalf of the Government, disclaimed any intention to make a personal attack on the noble lord or any other member of the late Government, but observed that there was evidently some looseness of administration when it took three weeks to ascertain the existence of a liability of nearly £1,000,000 above the estimate." "Some" looseness of administration, indeed! And this is the style of "administration" for which we have had to borrow a special eleven millions, besides paying 100 millions this year! Thus it is that our Navy, our first line of defence, has been treated! Whether the cause be gross carelessness, or whether, as has been more than hinted, the Estimates were intentionally brouillés, we do not inquire; the result is the same. But surely it is permissible to ask where this sort of thing is to end. If the country is thus rudely taught that it cannot place implicit trust in the control exercised by a First Lord of the Admiralty in charge of the Navy, if an ex-Viceroy of India, with some fifty millions of money annually under his care, is "out of his reckoning" to the tune of nearly one million out of eight—and that man a Baring—in the name of all that is wonderful, what will happen next?

ALTHOUGH the information given in the Persian papers be not invariably trustworthy, it is well not to leave their statements wholly out of sight. And a good deal of obscurity surrounds the late dealings of the Shah's Government as to Ayooob Khan.

AYOOB KHAN AND AFGHANISTAN.—The Persian paper Fars learns from Teheran that Ayooob Khan has not escaped, as was alleged, but is still there in the citadel in custody. He often receives the visits of the Persian Ministers. In a conversation on the present political situation of Afghanistan, he is said to have expressed his opinion that war between England and Russia was inevitable within the next five years, and that Abdur Rahman's "sham Government" would end, no matter which Power gained the day. The project of dividing Afghanistan would be very disadvantageous to England, which would have a thorn in the side of India, while Russia would soon amalgamate its share with Turkestan.

THE Englishman hears that it is the intention of the Government of India to place the forests shortly under the Revenue and Agricultural Department. They come at present under the Home Office, although it would be difficult to say for what reason. A change that would remove one of the greatest anomalies in our administrative system would be most welcome. We cordially agree; but it must not be forgotten that the expansion, and, consequently, the sub-division of the various departments, has not been the work of a day. There is not a Government department which did not, originally, deal with a greater variety of subjects than at present come before it. At one time, probably, one man made a pin. Now it takes—we forget how many. But while the one man made his one pin, a dozen would make, not twelve, but twelve dozen times twelve. Division (and sub-division) of labour is always a move in the right direction. The Home Department is vastly overburdened with financial and other work, while the forests clearly belong to a department which has some kind of connection with agriculture.

CONSIDERING our improved relations with Germany, consequent on the abdication of the late Government, between whom, and the countries their chief had wantonly insulted, no cordial relations were possible, we may see reason rather to welcome than to deprecate a closer intimacy between Germany and Persia. German officers have often trained Persian troops.

It is persistently reported in the Berlin Press that a Persian Ambassador will soon make his appearance in Berlin, where the Court of Teheran has hitherto been unrepresented. It is added that the present Persian Minister in Constantinople will probably be the first representative of the Shah in Berlin. It will be remembered that a special mission was recently sent from Germany to Teheran.

WE are sincerely sorry to learn that the Indo-Wimbledon scheme has collapsed for this year. There is, of course, no difficulty in assigning reasons for the failure. The Indian Daily News gives some. But none can be satisfactory. We hope not to have to record a similar failure next year. To "muff" the enterprise for the sake of a few hundred rupees, which could be got in "next to no time" by proper canvassing, at a sufficiently early period, is unpardonable. Why, many a man would give a good part, if not the whole, of the sum needful. There is now a full year—alas!—before a representative Indian team can "show" at Wimbledon. But then they must "show." Simply, the thing has to be done. Do it, and all luck attend you!

It might be heresy to say that the Freemasonry of Eton men equals the real article. But we have, on more than one occasion, found that it is a very good imitation of it. Eton men have a great knack of cottoning to one another. Lord Dufferin, one of the most social and sociable of men, has not forgotten the love which every Etonian feels for his old college. Witness the subjoined extract from the Bombay Gazette of June 9:—

A dinner to old Etonians was given last night by Sir Stuart Bayley. The Viceroy attended, being an old Etonian.

TALK about "scuttle!" We hope this Government "knows its own mind." Who is to pay for these stores? If Australia, we hope there will be a "big row" in the local Parliament; if England, a still bigger in our own. Can anything be more disgraceful? Is Wolseley or is Graham responsible? If not, who is? The Civil and Military Gazette is informed from Ceylon:—

When the Australians were leaving Suakim, the railway was being lifted and removed to prevent the Arabs from destroying it. The Commissariat arrangements were disgraceful. All the Australian stores were left behind; nobody took charge of them. The whole affair was conducted on the same insane principle. Get out of the place as fast as you can, and the d—l take the hindmost!

WE are glad to reprint this from the same journal about Kashmir. We hope St. John may be instructed to encourage and support any Dewan who does good. This is our real policy everywhere:—

A distinct improvement in the administration of the Kashmir State is said to be visible under the present Governor, Diwan Luchman Das. The Diwan is a younger brother of the old Diwan Kirpa Ram, whose death, some six or seven years ago, was so great a loss to Kashmir. Luchman Das seems to have set himself to the arduous but very necessary task of steadily putting a stop to the oppression of the minor State officials—all Hindu pandits—who have been accustomed to rob the Maharajah with one hand, and the people with the other. Already the Diwan's efforts at reform are yielding good results. Rice, the staple food of the country, which used purposely to be kept at as high a price and as much adulterated as possible, is cheaper and better now than it ever was; and all classes, except the Pundits, are naturally loud in praise of Diwan Luchman Das.

THE BISHOP OF BOMBAY gave a treat to the children in his High School. WAR has been declared at last, not against the Russians, but against the "hopeless imbeciles" who do not understand the art and mystery of lawn tennis. So everyone is studying the way to "cut" and "thw," and "place" and "rally." What is to become of the fools?

THE "wine" of the Garrow Hills must, indeed be nice if, at least, it answers to its description. "Put oatmeal into Gilbey's cheapest sherry, and add just a suspicion of castor oil to give it a flavour." Truly it reads nice.

It is gratifying to be able to find something good in Russia. In that abode of holiness mingled with deceit, debtors are divided into three classes—the unfortunate, the "careless," and the "fraudulent"—and are treated with corresponding leniency or severity, only the two latter being subject to imprisonment for varying periods. It would be hard in Russia to punish "unfortunates," as every resident in that country is, ipso facto, a luckless being.

INDIA seems a land of precocity. With the Natives this is proverbially the case. But here is another instance: Dr. Sherman Bigg, the great apostle of temperance, can boast that out of thirty years passed in the sphere of toil and trouble five years were wasted in drinking, and a quarter of a century consumed in total abstinence. In such case he must have taken to the bottle the day he was born.

In England the natural humiliation arising from the "regrettable incident" at Penjdeh is ancient history—no one troubles about the matter; but on the spot things are very different. There the officers from India, feeling rather sore against the Russians, do not like to meet them. If Cabinets here were obliged to go to the spot to settle their policy the current of events would often run in a very different channel. It is so easy to settle them in an armchair and talk blarney to the "House" after the thing is done, but it is much more embarrassing to have the practical working of remarkable decisions. Here the cry is at every turn that we have secured peace amidst scenes of unparalleled difficulty and trouble. Across the water they describe the policy of England as "Perish Gordon." "Let Russia work her will in Central Asia. But hands off our public-houses and gin-vaults."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

NOTES OF A TOUR FROM BRINDISI TO YOKOHAMA.*

Lord Ronald Gower's book certainly does not err on the side of prolixity, the whole journey from Brindisi to Japan being comprised in a little volume (of eighty pages) which, as the author tells us, was, at his own request, printed "in pocket form."

Starting from Brindisi Lord Ronald, wisely avoiding the Canal, went to Alexandria—then, in 1883, a mere heap of ruins (less owing to the insane bombardment than to its consequences)—thence to Cairo, Suez, Bombay, Ahmedabad, Delhi, Agra, Calcutta, to Singapore, China, and Japan. It was, it would seem, not the first occasion on which he had visited portions at least of the tropical regions.

Lord Ronald's careful observation of natural phenomena distinguishes him creditably from the many travellers who only care to record their dinner and their supper, and with whom mauvaise auberge is the key-note of the entire performance.

Our author is almost an enthusiast for the cremation, or, as an alternative, what he calls "devoural" of the dead, the latter being peculiar to Parsees and wild beasts. "We keep," he says, "near our dwellings the decaying corpses of millions, poisoning our springs, and now and again giving unmistakable proofs of the folly of making the living suffer, merely because some 1800 years ago it was found necessary to stow away underground the corpses of the early followers of Christ." Agreeing with the premisses, we can nevertheless hardly see our way to the conclusion. Is it needful to "make the living suffer" in order to bury the dead? We think many an open space besides Woking (where, however, a crematorium has been, we believe, erected for the benefit of the eclectic) will answer the question. "Dust thou art, and to dust thou shalt return," seems a fair epitome of Nature's guidance on this subject.

No one who has seen Benares can fail to sympathise with our author's feelings on visiting that holy city. "Here," he says, "one can form some idea of the strong hold that this people's religion has on them in this their holy Kasi, or metropolis of Hinduism. It would require a very sanguine missionary to hope that even in centuries to come these 'benighted Hindoos' will cease to believe in the sacred efficacy of their ancient river, as it reflects the old towers and spires of the temples of their gods, and the blue smoke wreathing itself towards heaven from the funeral pyres on which their dead are being consumed." We agree with him. It is impossible not to have a feeling akin to that with which all around us are inspired. "Quod ab omnibus." "There's a deal of human nature," and, let us add, of human sympathy, "in man."

We are right glad that Lord R. Gower has entered his emphatic protest against the preposterous way in which "philologists"—as we suppose we must call them—have of late taken to spelling Indian and other Oriental names, and which seems to be coming into vogue. Speaking of the acknowledged want of a thoroughly good guide-book for India, he says, "the one published by Murray, and written by Eastwick, is most unsatisfactory; one is not told what is worth seeing, but only confused by a wearisome and endless list of places, of which the spelling alone is enough to bewilder the reader. As a rule, it cannot matter much how Mr. Eastwick chooses to spell the names, but, when he changes the well-known and universal way of spelling such historic places as Lucknow into Lakknau, Delhi into Dihli, and Cawnpore into Kánhpúr, his guide becomes a puzzle and a nuisance."

When will the learned ones of the earth see that transliteration, and the rendering of the same sound, are two things rather more different than chalk and cheese? Take the English and French, figure, visage, face. Transliteration is not even needed, the spelling is identical. But the sound how different!

Is it impossible to make "philologists" realise the fact that, of all spellings of any given name, that is the best which conveys to the largest proportion of ordinary readers (we, of course, exclude works professedly of a linguistic nature) the sound to be expressed? Here, as in other matters, let common sense have its say. If we must slavishly follow Oriental spelling, we ought, to be consistent, use the Oriental names of places; we ought to go to Charing-cross, and ask for a ticket to Istamból when wishing to visit the capital of Turkey.

For our own part, we had almost sooner go back to the days when people wrote names like "Ally Cawn" for Ali Khan (it was at least an imitation, and a fair one, of the sound), and when an East India Director could gravely inquire whether "Sir Roger Dowler" (Suraja Dowlah) was a knight or a baronet.

One success, as regards India—with the rest of this pleasant, chatty book, we are not so much concerned—Lord R. Gower seems to have (as we hope and believe Lord Randolph Churchill has) achieved. He appears, unlike the present unpopular Governor of Madras, to have passed some months in the country without being inoculated with a "fad."

We cannot help thinking that Lord Ronald has somewhat strained the privilege to which, as a member of the band of Royal and noble authors, hereafter to be catalogued and commemorated by some future Horace Walpole, he is unquestionably entitled. He has committed—well, let us say, misprision of—treason against the Queen's English. Lord Ronald shall, in his turn, have all the benefit of what privilege he can claim. He shall, like Lord Ferrers, be hung with a sicken cord. But hung he must be, all the same. What will our readers say to such phrases as the following:—

"Many thousand prisoners, many of which make handsome carpets (p. 14). Other places of interest. . . . is the Observatory (p. 34). The Botanic Gardens. . . . should be seen by all travellers. . . . there are roses in it which are wonderful" (p. 35). "Here I met Major Knollys, who I had seen at Sydney" (p. 44). "We luncheoned" (p. 77), "we got luncheoned" (p. 67). To this "barbarous vocable," as Coleridge would have called it, we wholly object; but, even allowing its existence as an English word, it must be one thing or the other, active or passive. Fancy saying, "I got suppered."

As Japan hardly concerns us, we will only observe that we don't quite understand how Lord Ronald (p. 67) got "in and out of rocks" there. It used to be one of the old questions of the schoolmen, "What would be the result if an irresistible force came into contact with an immovable mass?" Clearly Lord Ronald and his party were the irresistible force; what became of the mass we need not now inquire.

But, putting verbal criticism aside, and recommending Lord Ronald Gower to observe the advice of a master of English, "Whenever you think you have written a particularly good sentence, run your pen through it," we may fairly congratulate our author on having produced an unaffected, cheerful, little book of travel. We hope to meet him again.

THE STOREHOUSES OF THE KING.*

It used to be said that the greatest fool can ask questions which the wisest man cannot answer. With this well-known proverb has always been connected, in our mind, a saying common in our—alas! too far distant—school days: "Ah, you think yourself jolly clever; who built the Pyramids?"

Now this question Mrs. Van Gelder has undertaken to answer. We may as well at once state her solution of the problem, namely, that the Pyramids were the storehouses erected by Joseph in order to preserve, during the seven years of famine, the superabundant harvest which was to be produced during the seven "years of plenty;" and the granite coffer found in the Great Pyramid she holds to be the "meter" by which the corn was measured out to the purchasers.

Readers of Piazzi Smyth's book, "Our Inheritance in the Pyramids," will remember that, as regards this coffer, he not only thought it a means of measuring (say) corn; but that its conception sprang from Divine inspiration.

As regards Professor Smyth's idea, we must say that we have never seen our way to perceiving Divine inspiration at all in this matter. That a measure, or "meter," intended, if not to be used, at least to be a check—like the standard yard—of other meters, should be put away in a place so wholly inaccessible as the interior of the Great Pyramid, seemed to us as unlikely as that the standard yard should be buried in Nelson's coffin in the crypt of St. Paul's, only to be exhumed on the specially obtained order of the Home Secretary.

Mrs. Van Gelder's suggestion has much less improbability. That, beneath the central chamber of the Pyramids, there was a vault, chasm, pit—call it as you will—which might have been filled with corn, is indubitable. Equally indubitable is the fact that (p. 55) persons who have assumed a recumbent posture while in the structure have had their clothing covered with a substance somewhat resembling flour. But there certainly is the proverbial slip 'twixt cup and lip ere one can hold it as a substantiated theory that the Pyramids were simply storehouses of corn, though we freely admit that, of many most improbable suggestions as to their origin, this is by no means the least plausible.

Mrs. Van Gelder has shown much enthusiasm and great ingenuity in advocating the theory she has adopted; and has, perhaps, rather "lugged in by head and shoulders" facts which hardly bear on it.

Our authoress finds the model of the erections known as Pyramids in the Tower of Babel (which, according to the account given by Mr. Rich in 1811, was, in part at least, built of bricks with straw, or reeds), and dwells on its durability; it being "in all likelihood at present nearly in the state in which Alexander saw it, if we give credit to the report that ten thousand men could, in two months, only remove the rubbish, preparatory to repairing it." Somewhat unduly ignoring the fact that, in damp climates like Mesopotamia and Egypt, it would be by no means safe to store corn in large quantities (as, even with previous artificial drying—of which there is no trace, either in Scripture or in the Pyramids themselves—it would assuredly germinate), she contends that the Great Pyramid, a storehouse of corn, was entered through the Sphinx. How the other Pyramids were, in Mme. Van Gelder's opinion, entered we do not quite gather—some have no sphinxes near them, and, as is well known, are neither in size or finish by any means equal to their grand prototype. The authoress also maintains that the passage through which travellers reach the interior was used for the conveyance of corn to the storehouse (p. 10), which was then duly closed.

The construction of similar erections, in some measure deriving their origin and form from Egypt or from Mesopotamia, is somewhat fancifully traced to Mexico, to Further India, and even to Ireland—another damp climate—where the well-known Round Towers, usually thought to have been connected, as emblems, with the Phallic worship, are, by Mrs. Van Gelder, unhesitatingly put down as storehouses of corn.

Perhaps the most original part of the work before us is that relating to Moses, who is supposed, by rather a violent "wresting" of the narrative in the Pentateuch, to have travelled—everywhere founding divinely-inspired laws—in India (where he is to be recognised under the name of Manu), in China, Japan, Mexico, and, of all places in the world, Alaska, where a dwelling-house, the entry to which was adorned with the representation of an animal's mouth, is supposed to have replaced the sphinx, and to have been left as an indication—10,000 miles away—that the real entrance to the Great Pyramid (what of the others?) was through the Sphinx. When we read (with no better proof of the allegation than this house-door, and without ground assigned to doubt the truth of the Scripture statement that Moses "died there in the land of Moab") of Moses having travelled to America, we do feel inclined to go to America, too, for an expression, and to say, "Oh! Moses!"

The striking, nay, the extraordinary, influence which the legislation of Moses has had over the legislation of a great part of the world, which we have no reason to believe him personally to have visited, is incontestable, and needs no fanciful attempts at proof. Whether owing to the dispersion of the Jews, to an involuntary recognition of the purity and excellence of the law which we are taught to believe that God promulgated through him, or to any other cause, is not now the point at issue: the fact remains.

Leaving this digressive portion of the volume—a portion which would have more fitly been entitled "Imaginary Peregrinations of Moses"—we have only, in conclusion, to say, that Mrs. Van Gelder has collected her facts with unusual industry and research, has marshalled them with uncommon skill, and has produced a work which cannot fail to be at once attractive and suggestive to those who take an interest in the subject of which it treats. But she has, to our mind, not as yet answered the schoolboy's question, "Who built the Pyramids?"

A STRANGE story comes from Bombay. A Government official being ordered to report himself at head-quarters jumped upon the mail cart, where he found a female companion journeying in the same direction. Inquiring of the driver as to the antecedents of his fair companion he elicited no more information than she was "one woman." So on they journeyed, but not a word escaped the lips of the silent feminine traveller, till at length the official becoming somewhat enraged said that he would make the mysterious individual speak. So he apologised to her; he brought her tea, he joked her, he asked her if she objected to smoking, in vain—not a syllable moved the threshold of her lips. Daylight revealed the fearful secret—she was a corpse, en route to burial.

ZANZIBAR.

THE marvellous development of the colonizational tendencies of the Germans calls our attention to Zanzibar, where they, at one time, seemed to have purchased, or to have acquired by less justifiable methods, interests, real or imaginary, distinctly antagonistic to our own.

Of all nations in the world we ought to be the last to complain of the enterprises (if kept within reasonable limits) which our Teutonic relatives may undertake, seeing that we owe our national appellation, and, to a great extent, our national existence, to the same spirit of expatriation, which has made our own Empire the greatest in the world.

Everyone knows that the Franco-German war, seemingly so gratuitous, originated in the absolute necessity in which Napoleon III. latterly was of finding work for the soldiery, as well as affording the masses somewhat to divert attention from domestic matters. Nor is it uncharitable to suppose that Bismarck also has his motives to find homes and work for the teeming millions of Germany in other countries besides the United States of America, where, indeed, the German colonists may almost be called a rival State to Germany. It is well known that the Western States and Territories form a kind of greater Germany, in which, as well as in other States, notably New York, our cousins-german—probably owing to their high standard of education, and the thoroughness (Tüchtigkeit) of their attainments, exercise an influence wholly disproportionate to their numerical strength. That they deluge Germany with their produce, to the unspeakable disgust of the German farmers, is well known.

Bismarck is not likely to dread the creation of a rival German State. But he had some motive for so warmly taking up the project of diverting into other channels than America the inevitable yearly emigration of thousands of his countrymen.

And that this emigration is natural, as well as necessary, no one who has heard the high-flown expectations held out by emigration agents in the German villages, who knows the wretched condition of many of their peasantry, their hatred of compulsory military service, and the comparatively large sums from time to time remitted by people who, indigent at home, have become fairly prosperous in America, can for a moment doubt.

Now in Africa the German has a fair field. The syllogism is irrefutable. Nature abhors a vacuum; here is, so far as anything like civilisation is concerned, a vacuum; therefore, it must be filled. Why not by ourselves?

This unhappy, but irrefragable, argument has brought us into unpleasant relations with the Germans in more than one part of Africa; and the half-hearted, vacillating way, in which any disputes were treated under the late Government, led us, rearer than is generally known, to a real embroilment with Germany. Of course we had to eat humble pie, it was the sole diet of the Gladstone Administration; but the difficulty was avoided, and, with a Cabinet which knows its own mind, others are not likely to occur.

We propose to confine ourselves at present to one only of the tracts, where matters, as between the Germans and ourselves, have not gone altogether smoothly. We refer to the Eastern coast of Africa, and especially to Zanzibar.

Towards the close of the seventeenth century the Muscat Arabs, having driven the Persians from Oman to their own side of the Persian Gulf, gave their own chief the title of Sultan, or, to speak more correctly, elected him Imâm. Invited, in 1698, by the people of Zanzibar to help them in expelling the Portuguese, whose tyranny was insupportable, they did so, and assumed the government (only nominally, however, till 1807). Indeed, at one time there was a serious intention of making Zanzibar, which the Arabs call Zungbar, the capital instead of Muscat. Nor, sooth so say, can we wonder at the preference shown by the Arabs to the beautiful and fertile island over the extinct volcanic craters which (do not) adorn a considerable portion of Oman.

The fertility, which enchanted the Arabs, and which is by no means confined to the island itself, but is, to a great degree, shared by a large portion of the 1,100 miles of coast over which the dominion of the Zanzibar Ruler extends, did not fail to attract other settlers, among whom the natives of our Indian dominions occupy a prominent place, both as to their numbers and as to their commercial ability and success.

The aborigines, who, as the name Zanguebar (equivalent to Bar es Zenug, "the country of the Zenug," or blacks) signifies, are pure negroes, were much given to slave-dealing, from which traffic, indeed, a large portion of the Revenue of the State was formerly derived. It was no easy matter to obtain the formal abolition of this nefarious traffic, and the matter had to be approached cautiously. At first the traffic from the mainland to the island—a distance little more than that from Dover to Calais—was stopped, notwithstanding open threats of rebellion from influential Arab Sheikhs; but it was not until many years later that the Sultan, though owing to the British Government his practical freedom from dependence on Muscat, (excepting a nominal tribute), was brought to consent to the abolition of the "coast-wise" trade. Even this concession was only made, after Sir Bartle Frere had in vain endeavoured to obtain it by persuasion, in obedience to force majeure, in the shape of a British squadron.

It is, perhaps, hardly to be wondered at, that, after this, we were, for awhile, not much more popular at Zanzibar than we should have been at Copenhagen after Nelson's bombardment of that city, and that the Sultan should have looked elsewhere for friends. Yet it is not wholly impossible that discreet representations might have led the Ruler to see that England's interests in Zanzibar are in almost every point of view, identical with his own. We have no aggressive inclinations, we wish to see the country prosperous; so does he. We desire to protect him from foreign aggression. He wishes to be thus protected.

And we hope that matters are gradually working round to a point when the Sultan may see where his true interests lie. It would seem that the Germans in Zanzibar, like the French in Madagascar, have been somewhat too high-handed; and a letter from Dr. Fischer, the German Consul at Zanzibar, which the National Zeitung publishes, and which is cited in the Times of the 13th (although probably somewhat overdrawn, and, as regards the slave trade, assuredly erroneous), seems to indicate that matters are less unsatisfactory as concerns British interests than seemed some months ago to be the case. Dr. Fischer writes, under date June 8:—

The political situation at Zanzibar has greatly changed since I was here last. Then Germany was well liked by the Sultan; now he hates it. It would have been easy for Gerard Rohlfs, on arrival in Zanzibar, to persuade the Sultan to place himself under German protection, since the acquisition of Usugara was then a secret. This is no longer the case, and the Sultan has thrown himself into the arms of the English. The English naval station for the prevention of the slave trade has been removed, and slaves are again imported, although the Sultan has bound himself to prohibit it. The prices of slaves have accordingly sunk. Dr. Kirk, the English Consul-General, who was formerly feared and hated, is now all powerful. The members of the German East African Company are all leaving the coast.

We hope and believe that the renewal and consolidation of our once preponderant influence at Zanzibar may safely be left in the hands of Sir John Kirk, who is understood to have long been aware of the danger of German encroachments on the East African coast. The words, "the acquisition of Usugara was then a secret," are very significant, and show that Russia is not the only country which works underhand against British interests. Forewarned, forearmed, and we have no doubt that Sir John will "keep his weather eye open," while, with the vastly improved relations between ourselves and Germany, which have prevailed since the fall of the late Teuton-hating Government, we may at least hope that "the Greatest Statesman in Europe" will not go out of his way to injure us at Zanzibar.

But in any case it is on the vigilance of our Representatives, and on his personal influence with the Sultan, that here, as at all Oriental Courts, reliance must mainly be placed.

TRANSLATION AND TRANSLITERATION.

WHEN, for the sins of mankind, they were condemned to speak different languages, the two chief difficulties which distress civilised folk were not realizable by the illiterate persons who were thus dispersed. These difficulties are translation and transliteration.

The vagaries of translators have been a mark for wits, and would-be wits, since translations began. And it must be admitted that translators, even of works of the most overwhelming importance, have given much occasion for hostile criticism. An unsophisticated individual might have supposed that threescore and ten learned Jews would have been able to give, in Greek, a correct rendering of the Hebrew Scriptures. Yet many a scholar will tell you that the Septuagint, the production of the threescore and ten, gives, in some passages, nothing of the kind. Much the same may be said of the Vulgate, which, though supported by the powerful arm of the Church of Rome, and, therefore, still in use, frequently fails to reproduce what a Frenchman would call the nuances of even the Greek original.

The fact is, that there are in few languages many words which have exactly the same force (neither more nor less) as the corresponding word in another tongue. Take the English "figure," the French "figure," the Italian, or the Spanish, "figura," the German "Figur." Each word has the primary meaning much the same. But how much does it express beyond the primary meaning? In each language something wholly different. Words, if the expression may be used, overlap each other in different languages. Hence the difficulty—a great one, as all experienced translators know—of finding a precise equivalent for any given word.

With transliteration the case is even stronger. The human voice, from infancy to old age, is capable of producing all but an infinity of sounds. And the recognised pronunciation of the same word is perpetually varying. No one would now consider it a rhyme to say that the Queen

"Whom these realms obey,

Here sometimes counsel takes, and sometimes tea."

Yet Pope wrote this—and no man was more critical as to his rhymes—not 200 years ago.

This, among other reasons, makes transliteration, the exact rendering of sound, certainly not less difficult than translation, the precise reproduction of sense or meaning. As regards the latter, we fear that the difficulty will for ever remain unsolved. As regards the former, no canon can be absolutely perfect. But any rule is better than none, and we are really glad to see that the Geographical Society, a body sufficiently authoritative to command attention to its decisions, have issued a table of rules for the transliteration of foreign names, which we propose shortly to reprint when space may permit. Meanwhile our readers may rest in blissful security that, as regards Indian names, the spelling adopted by Dr. Hunter is not to be altered, whether they like it or not.

"BRING me one who says no, and I will punish him," was the angry remonstrance of a traveller in the far East to a servant who reported that the men would not budge an inch. But the attendant was equal to the occasion. "I can't," said he, "they all say they won't."

FANCY mixing dough with castor-oil. This was what Cameron's cook did when they were travelling in Equatorial Africa. But things are funny in that region. Those who indulge in snuff take it liquid, and prevent the precious fluid from running out of the nose by nippers placed on the latter appendage. What happens when the nippers are removed may be better imagined than described.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JULY 27, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, July 7th; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, July 5th.

OUR first note shall express, what we are sure all our readers feel, a sincere wish for the long life and happiness of the BRIDE.

THE latest, news as regards the burning question of the Afghan frontier, continues unsatisfactory, and the political horizon looks black. The Russians have discovered that—so they say—there is a Zulfiar of the plains and a Zulfiar of the passes. The former it was, they tell us, that they “ceded” (his own territory, mind!) to the Ameer; if he wants the latter, he can only have it on condition of letting the Russian troops have the right of way over the passes. A nice way of giving with the left hand and taking with the right!

BUT it is notorious that it was solely on condition of entirely holding the flanking position of Zulfiar that the Ameer gave up Penjdeb, which we have guaranteed him.

THE Russian and pro-Russian Press on the Continent are angry (as we ought to be) at this protraction of the negotiations—though it is a well-devised trick on their part—and have put up the “official news-letter” (as the Times calls it), the Political Correspondence, to insert a letter, said to be written as though M. de Giers had dictated it, professing utter disbelief in Lord Salisbury’s sincerity.

THE Russians have procured from the Chinese the expulsion from Kashgar of Mr. Dalgleish (the agent of the Central Asian Trading Company). Let our Government note, that it will soon have to be settled, and finally settled, whether English or Russian influence is to predominate in China. We hope our readers will peruse Mr. Colquhoun’s remarks on the subject, quoted by the Calcutta correspondent of the Times.

REFERRING to some remarks which we deemed it right to make, not long since, on Kashmir, it will be seen of what great importance is the probable demise of the present Maha Rajah. It is of the first moment to have an experienced agent always in the Province.

It is proposed to hold military manoeuvres on a large scale next winter. Two armies, each 20,000 strong, will be concentrated at Umballa and Delhi respectively, and exercised between those places.

WE shall be truly sorry if so ripe and scientific a lawyer as Sir H. Maine should find himself too unwell to undertake the permanent Under-Secretaryship at the Home Office. It is a most important post, though one which has usually been filled rather with reference to personal considerations than to the paramount consideration of ensuring continuity of administration. Secretaries of State “may come, and they may go,” but permanent under-secretaries—well, don’t “go on for ever,” but—for a very long time; and are, in all matters of detail—is not life made up of details?—the real administrators. A man—nay, a statesman—like Sir H. Maine, would be the ideal Under-Secretary at the Home Office.

SOME weeks since we pointed out how entirely we had alienated Persia, and how easy it would have been to secure her friendship. It is better that she should gravitate to Germany than to Russia, though, perhaps, not so very much better as might, at first sight, be supposed. Yet it is matter of grave importance to read that:—

Wearied of English and Russian intrigues, and convinced of France’s inability to help, the Shah has taken refuge under the all-embracing wings of the Imperial Chancellor. Persia’s main cause of alarm is the possibility that Russia may annex Afghanistan, and thus enclose the Shah’s territory on two sides. Prince Bismarck, however, has established an Embassy in Teheran, and this is tantamount, according to the writer, to an assurance of protection. Another guarantee is thus formed against the outbreak of war on the Afghan frontier, as this would infallibly involve Persian interests, which Germany wishes to protect. The Dictator of Europe would thus also appear to be Dictator in Asia; but it is matter for sincere congratulation that he makes his début in the interests of peace. The return which he looks for, on his notorious principle of do ut des, is an extension of Germany’s commercial relations with Persia.

Why should Persia ever have had an ally in Asia but ourselves?

It is said that we have to eat a peck of dirt during our lifetime, and we have assuredly often to sup full of horrors. But we do not remember having read a more terrible story than that of people who had to eat the soles of their own feet. Yet such is the account which the Bombay Gazette gives of the sufferings of the crew of a vessel shipwrecked some 300 miles from land.

SPECULATION appears rife as to the successor, in the very important office of Commander-in-Chief in India, to Sir Donald Stewart, who, it is said, will soon be appointed to the Council of India (thus filling one of the six or seven vacancies which will soon occur in that distinguished body). The Council loses some of their most experienced members. May the new blood be equal to the old!

As to the Commandership-in-Chief, we are glad to see the name of Sir F. Roberts prominently mentioned. The Times justly says:—

Sir F. Roberts is in every respect suited for such a command at such a moment. He is young, active, brimming over with soldierly ardour, and unsurpassed for knowledge of the Afghan question. His appointment would be in the highest degree popular with the army.

The other names mentioned at Calcutta are Lord Wolseley, General Hardinge (whose health is said not to be robust), and Sir H. Norman.

SOME weeks since we referred with pleasure to the offers of military and pecuniary assistance from the Native States of India. Forthwith we heard that Holkar had had been the first to offer aid, that the other Princes and Chiefs had only followed suit, and that even Holkar’s offer was not spontaneous, but had been more than prompted by Sir Lepel Griffin. We did not believe this at the time, but are none the less pleased to see (in the Times) the following authoritative démenti from Sir L. Griffin himself:—

“I had no conversation with the Maharajah on the subject of his loyal offer to Government of the troops and the resources of his State; indeed, this offer reached me by telegram, when I was visiting the Rajah of Rutlam at a distance from Indore. I have no reason to believe the Maharajah’s action was not altogether spontaneous. Of the great chiefs of Central India, Maharajah Holkar was not the first to offer his services. The first was the chivalrous Princess of Bhopal, who expressed her willingness to aid the Government with her troops either in the Soudan or on the North-West frontier. Her offer was also conveyed by telegraph when I was far distant in Rewah, and I have no doubt that it was as spontaneous and uninspired as that of Maharajah Holkar.”

WE are very glad to see it stated in the Admiralty and Horse Guards Gazette that the formation of an arsenal at Bellary has been, for some time past, advocated by competent authorities. We now hear that, through the influence of Sir F. Roberts, the Commander-in-Chief in Madras, measures are to be at once taken to establish it, the arsenal at Secunderabad being at the same time reduced to a second class one.

The Lahore Civil and Military Gazette, which is usually practical in its remarks, has the following from Peshawur:—

Peshawur Fort is still littered with arms and ammunition on their way to Cabul, but, as one gazes on that enormous pile of cases, one reflects that charity ought to begin at home, and that those Martini Henry rifles might have been issued to our own native troops, and that Sniders would have been good enough for the tag-rag and bobtail, which the Ameer's army evidently are.

THE Government of Madras is in communication with the Government of India on the subject of the desirability of detailing a suitable ship of war to patrol the Coromandel coast, her headquarters being Madras, and Trincomalee being named as her station at seasons when bad weather is probable at Madras.

WE take the following from the Admiralty and Horse Guards Gazette. We have every reason to believe the statements it contains to be thoroughly well-founded:—

Russia is most active at this moment in her war preparations. It is entirely through our inactivity during the past winter months that she has been encouraged to be so. While the Volga was frozen, stores and troops of every kind had to be brought by rail to the Crimea, where they were shipped across the Black Sea, where it was in our power to stop them, to Poti. There they had to be transferred by rail to Baku, and reshipped to Krasnovodsk. At this latter place they had to be reloaded into small boats and taken across the bay to Michaelovitch, from whence they were forwarded by rail to Kizil Arvat. From the difficulty of these various transfers and retransfers, and as the lines of rail mentioned are only single, the collection of stores and men to the east of the Caspian progressed but slowly, and up to May we can confidently assert that Russia had not more than 20,000 men across the Caspian, and that these could only be supplied with difficulty, while the line of supply could have been cut by us at any time in the Black Sea. Now that the Volga is clear of ice, troops and stores are being loaded in barges at the three points where the railways abut on that river, and are taken direct to Krasnovodsk without any further trouble. Before the winter comes on again the Russians will have collected sufficient stores to last till the Volga is again open. We can no longer cut the communications of her army, and it is now that Russia, being able to concentrate all the troops and stores she requires, is again becoming aggressive.

THE effect of opium on the human frame has so often been discussed that it has passed into the list of the many subjects on which "doctors disagree." But the following, which we do not remember to have seen elsewhere, and which we take from the Ceylon Times, is suggestive. We know that opium temporarily suspends active exertion on the part of the recipient; but that it should also suspend decomposition is to us a novelty. A fact for the homœopathists!—

A writer on the late operations in Tonquin states that he noticed that the bodies of the Chinese killed did not decompose like those of the French. They simply became discoloured, remained almost intact, and, in a word, did not decay, but assumed the appearance of mummies. He suggests the inquiry whether this curious fact be due to the effects of opium smoking? Even the carrion birds, he says, neglected the bodies of the Chinese, with the exception of the eyes.

THE Prokash says, as regards the candidature for Parliament of the late Governor of Bombay:—

Sir James Ferguson is a politician of moderate views and good intentions; such men may well be expected to be of some use as members of Parliament. But if it is true that no one has any chance of gaining the ear of the House of Commons, who is not a good speaker—and Sir James unfortunately can hardly be ranked as one—we doubt if he will rise to any position of importance as a member of that body. Moreover, though he is impulsive, and, at times, nobly impulsive too, he is not what one might call a strong politician. But, for all that, a politician like him, who, though a party man, is free from the rancour of party spirit, deserves to succeed.

For ourselves we welcome any man, on whichever Parliamentary bench he may sit, who is free from "fads," and has some practical knowledge of Indian affairs.

MANY members of the Indian Services have distinguished themselves in researches in various departments of Natural History. Cantley and Falconer in paleontology, Fayrer in ophiology, are known to all. But we doubt if any one has surpassed Mr. Allan Hume (himself, by the way, we believe, the son of a medical man). Such an ornithological collection as he has made seems to border on the fabulous. Fancy 62,000 specimens, besides any number of eggs! The Civil and Military Gazette says:—

The value and extent of Mr. A. O. Hume's munificent gift to the British Museum is only now beginning to be realised. His collection of ornithological specimens amounts to 62,000 skins of all kinds; and it has cost Mr. Bowdler Sharpe, of the Natural History Department of the British Museum, more than three weeks of uninterrupted labour to pack and send it away. Even now the work is not at an end, for the collection of eggs—in itself no insignificant one—remains to be despatched. It is small wonder, then, that the gift should have been described by Mr. Sharpe himself as "the grandest collection of birds ever made." It represents the labour and learning of a lifetime.

The Geographical Society have, as mentioned in our last number, issued a system of orthography for native names of places, which we gladly subjoin:—

"Taking into consideration the present want of a system of geographical orthography, and the consequent confusion and variety that exist in the mode of spelling in English maps, the Council of the Royal Geographical Society have adopted the following rules for such geographical names as are not, in the countries to which they belong, written in the Roman character. These rules are identical with those adopted for the Admiralty charts, and will henceforth be used in all publications of the society.

"1. No change will be made in the orthography of foreign names in countries which use Roman letters; thus Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch, &c., names will be spelt as by the respective nations.

"2. Neither will any change be made in the spelling of such names in languages which are not written in Roman characters, as have become, by long usage, familiar to English readers; thus, Calcutta, Cutch, Celebes, Mecca, &c., will be retained in their present form.

"3. The true sound of the word as locally pronounced will be taken as the basis of the spelling.

"4. An approximation, however, to the sound is alone aimed at. A system which would attempt to represent the more delicate inflections of sound and accent would be so complicated as only to defeat itself. Those who desire a more accurate pronunciation of the written name must learn it on the spot by a study of local accent and peculiarities.

"5. The broad features of the system are that vowels are pronounced as in Italian and consonants as in English.

"6. One accent only is used, the acute, to denote the syllable on which stress is laid. This is very important, as the sounds of many names are entirely altered by the misplacement of this 'stress.'

"7. Every letter is pronounced. When two vowels come together each one is sounded, though the result, when spoken quickly, is sometimes scarcely to be distinguished from a single sound, as in ai, au, ei.

"8. Indian names are accepted as spelt in Hunter's 'Gazetteer.'

"COTTON is King, Nigger is not; Dollar is not, Cotton is." Such was the commencement of the most celebrated leading article of modern times, and deservedly celebrated. This is plain speaking. Not the least like the Times, of which the Westminster boys were taught to say, very truly, that "Articulus Ductor" was "Nec definitus, nec brevis, articulus," which, being interpreted, may stand:—

An article not definite, nor brief,
To find out what it means is a relief.

Now, something of this ring of practically knowing what you mean to say, and saying it, we hope and believe we discern in Lord Salisbury's speeches as regards that all-important point, the Afghan frontier, how far we will safeguard it, and, by so doing, safeguard our own territory.

THE news brought by telegraph of the death of General Grant will excite many a reminiscence among those whose recollection goes back a few years. It will not be forgotten how a certain prominent Statesman declared, with the exact amount of accuracy usual in his political forecasts, that Jefferson Davis had created, not a state only, but a nation. Within two years the Confederacy was crushed, and by Grant. Anyone with the smallest foresight would have seen that the occasional running of a blockade in some half-dozen ports in the Southern States could not compensate for the uninterrupted supply of all munitions of war to the Northern States. But some people "cannot see further than the doorway," as our Dorsetshire peasantry say.

THERE has always seemed to us something uncanny in filling a certain number of niches with a corresponding number of counterfeit presentments, whether painted or sculptured. The last niche but too truly indicates finality. The last Doge of Venice, the last Emperor of Germany (in the Kaisersaal, or Emperor's Hall, at Frankfort), and, unless memory fails us, the last Pope (Pio Nono) who wielded temporal sway, all filled the last place in the halls designed to commemorate a long line of sovereigns. Perhaps some such idea occurred to the Jam-i-Jamshed when it wrote, à propos of Sir R. Temple's statue at Bombay—

To fill up all the available niches in the Town Hall with costly statues is, we believe, not the proper way to keep alive the memory of those in whose honour the statues were made. Perhaps, in olden times, there was no better place available for these memorials, or it may be that in those days the Town Hall was a more frequented place than it appears to be now. As these statues are placed at present, they are by no means ornaments to the city, and the chances are that sooner or later Government will claim them as Government property, since they have been for a long time in a building which latterly Government have thought fit to call their own.

BUT we must differ from our contemporary as to the safety of these works of art (?). We think there is not one which any reasonable Government would care to claim as State property. They will be like Theseus (Sedet, æternumque sedebit), stick to their pedestals en attendant the impending New Zealander.

WE have all heard of the 'ologies. Now we seem to be having an irruption of the 'ries. We have heard of the Fisheries, the Healtheries, the Inventories, and, finally, up at Mussoorie, they have got the Doggeries; and a really good show of dogs they seem to have had. Wonderful to relate, the prize for ugliness was not carried off by a bulldog; to whom it went, reporter (of Englishman) sayeth not.

A LETTER from Colonel Prjvalsky, dated Feb. 10, quoted by the Times of India, mentions that he had, in eighteen months, accomplished two-thirds of his journey, having explored some 3,700 miles in the territory on the northern borders of Tibet. "We passed," he says, "the last autumn and winter in the western districts of Zaidam and in the north of Tibet, where we made several geographical discoveries. We arrived yesterday at Lob Nor, where we shall pass the whole of the month of February to observe the passage of birds. In the month of March we shall start for the tour of Kisia. We shall pass the summer on the mountains north of Tibet, and in the autumn return to Turkestan."

THE DEFENCES OF INDIA.—The Times of India says:—"So much interest has been recently excited in the naval armaments of the principal seaport towns in India, that perhaps it may interest some of our readers, who are not already behind the scenes, to learn that the Indian Government have for some time past been elaborating a system of torpedo defence. Specially selected officers of the Royal Engineers have been stationed at Calcutta, Rangoon, Bombay, and Kurrachee, with a competent staff of European non-commissioned officers and a company of native sappers and miners. 'Submarine mining and harbour defences' are specially entrusted to these officers, and their work supervised by the Inspector of Submarine Defences. The establishment, exclusive of the pay of the non-commissioned officers and men, amounts in Bengal to 29,320 rupees, in Madras to 20,830 rupees, and in Bombay to 22,120 rupees—yearly 72,270 rupees. The inspector is in constant communication with the Admiralty at home, and every new destructive engine of submarine warfare is critically examined and experimented upon. The department is in a thoroughly satisfactory state, and although, as might naturally be expected, we are not at liberty to state at what stage the defences have arrived, we may state that the defences are of the most efficient stamp."

WHAT is the greatest pleasure in life? "Johnny" Davis, of Burmese notoriety, says that, as far as his experience is concerned, he never enjoyed a greater treat than when he split a dacoit's back from the nape of the neck to the waist, with one blow of his sword; but then it is not given to every man either to have such a chance, or to be powerful enough to avail himself of it, even if the opportunity did present itself.

"WHEREVER there exists an educated native community there will be some among it who will be sensible of having lost a personal friend." Then Mr. A. S. Harrison, who, at the time of his death, was Principal of the Muir College, Allahabad, has not in vain "strutted on the stage of time."

On dit says that the Duchess of Connaught sent home from Bombay, in H.M.S. Serapis, a favourite cat, which her Royal Highness placed in charge of a sergeant of the Royal Artillery; but, alas! on the voyage this faithless and fickle animal presented the world with a litter of kittens. But now came a dilemma; the ship's authorities had power to discharge one cat—the mother. To include the babies was ultra vires—so a paper war ensued, with what result is not known to ordinary mortals. The story, if true, is illustrative of "red tape" and its dangers.

THE Chief Court of the Punjab has been setting society by the ears. In the first case a boy-husband of sixteen summers claimed marital rights over a woman, who, on attaining her majority, had married the lord of her choice. The Court restored her to the man chosen for her when both of them were infants. She chanced, too, to be a mother; so her son was thus ruled to be illegitimate, her husband was amenable to the law as having eloped with a married woman, while she herself had indulged in the innocent pastime of bigamy; and yet she had done nothing but marry a person she liked instead of handing herself over to an individual whom some one else liked for her! In the second case a young Muslim husband sued for the restitution of conjugal rights, as his wife had left him, pleading that since her marriage she had embraced Christianity. The Lower Court supported his claim; but, nothing daunted, the woman, at the instance of her missionary adviser, appealed to the High Court, who ruled that, according to Muhammadan law, the adoption of the Christian religion was an act of apostasy, and, ipso facto, annulled the marriage. So the pious Muslim lost his wife, plus the costs of trying to retain her, while the fickle pervert gained, it may be supposed, a spouse of the new religion which she had turned to such good account.

CEYLON was in raptures for a time. Buddha's tooth has been exhibited to a flock of admiring devotees. As over 100 priests were present on the occasion, doubtless, from a pious point of view, the ceremony must have been very interesting.

DR. T. BLANEY points out the necessity of doing something for the Hindu poor in the time of sickness. He states the case in forcible language:—"Nobody visits their poor in their sickness, and nobody cares for them. They lie panting and drowsy and helpless, in fevers, away from light and fresh air, and die when they ought to recover. If any one at all gives them help, it is neighbours who are as poor and ignorant as themselves, and as a consequence the help is not very useful: thus it is that the poor bear the burdens of the poor. Whatever the religion, this ought not to be. The religion of humanity is, or ought to be, sufficient to convince us that we have all of us a duty to discharge to suffering humanity, no matter who the sufferer may be." All honour to Dr. Blaney.

THE attempt made by Mr. J. C. Douglas to introduce Italian bees into India has been a complete success.

JUSTICE in India commits sad pranks. The fine imposed on a railway servant who was absent without leave was Rs.20 (£2), while a man who ran away with his neighbour's wife escaped scot free for Rs.50 (£5). Evidently wives are at a discount.

It is significant that nowadays in India whenever the villagers find a suspicious-looking stranger in their neighbourhood, they take him for a Russian spy.

"P-S-Y-C-H-E!" exclaimed an old salt, after vainly trying to decipher the name of a yacht at anchor. "Well, if that ain't the darndest way of spelling fish that I ever saw!"

WHAT a nice man the Emperor of Abyssinia must be! "He cuts off the noses of those who take snuff, and the lips of those who smoke. Cruel to a degree, he does not, however, take life. He cuts off the feet and hands of the people who offend him. He puts out their eyes by pouring hot tallow into their ears." This monster, forsooth, is a Christian monarch, professing to be guided by the most enlightened principles of religion and piety

"Comparisons are odorous," thus proclaimeth the poet. None the less, a good, honest pagan seems preferable to a drivelling sinner in the guise of a saint.

WHEN Burke, on the occasion of the impeachment of Warren Hastings, had exhausted the powers of vituperation, and emptied upon the head of the devoted statesman the phials of an Irishman's wrath, the great pro-Consul delivered himself of this pithy epigram:—

"Oft have I wondered that on Irish ground
No poisonous reptiles ever yet were found;
Revealed the secret stands of Nature's work,
She saved her venom to create a Burke."

A NEW insecticide has been discovered composed of the dried leaves of a plant, which is fatal to the lower forms of life.

WHAT are the signs and tokens of modesty? Blushing cheeks and downcast eyes proclaim what is England's answer to the inquiry. Not so the Soudanese, who show their hands in their mouths when for the first time they behold their dark shining frames in a looking-glass!

LORD DUFFERIN has made an innovation. Instead of giving one large dinner to, say, seventy people, he prefers three repasts with between twenty and thirty guests; and far preferable is the new arrangement.

NEGAPATAM has started a new sect known to fame as "Path-ruites" (from a Portuguese word signifying preacher), all of whom are preachers.

HERE is a quaint sign for a wine merchant's shop:—"Wine sold here, to gladden the heart of man, and very strong spirituous liquors of all kinds to make one as brave as Alexander the Conqueror. None need fear to drink.—Proverbs xxi. 7."

GORDON tells a charming story. Some years ago a man in high place was asked by a lady to recommend her son for an appointment. He promised to do his best; but being an honest man, in making application for the post for his protégé, he added that he did not think the youth worth much. In the hurry of the moment he placed this letter in the envelope addressed to the lady; the result being that the latter never looked on the offender again.

It is a singular coincidence that there should now be quartered at Dover the identical four officers of the Royal Artillery who, in 1855, when stationed there, took it into their heads to cross the Channel in an ordinary galley, which they duly did, arriving at Calais in about five hours. On their arrival the nephew of his uncle was perambulating the pier. The town was crowded, not a table at a restaurant—let alone a bed—to be had. The news of the arrival, in a galley, of four English madmen was, of course, conveyed to the Prefect, who did not know whether to consign the maniacs, and did not wish them to roam about the town all night, so he consulted "the highest authority," the Emperor, and the latter, a really kind man at heart—teste dear old Sir Francis Head—responded by giving the four wild Englishmen a good dinner and a share of his own apartments. Odd enough that the whirligig of time should have brought these four old comrades once more to the same station at the same moment!

CIVILISATION OF THE EASTERN IRANIANS IN ANCIENT TIMES.*

Amongst the many nationalities which bend the knee in submission to the Empress of India, none are more deserving of consideration than the Parsis, or followers of Zoroaster. Leaving their native land of Persia on account of their refusal to worship a God whom they knew not, or to do homage to a prophet whose teachings were alien to their thoughts and doctrines, they seem to have clung from generation to generation, to the religion of their ancestors, with a tenacity of purpose which can scarcely fail to excite sympathy and to occasion admiration; indeed, even now, after the lapse of centuries, they retain their creed in much of the primeval simplicity and purity which characterised the religion given to his followers by the founder of the faith. Doraboy Framjee's most interesting work has recently revealed the inner workings of the sect, and drawn aside the veil from their hidden life; Dr. Geiger, in the volume before us, seeks rather to picture the Parsis in the early days, when the "Avesta" still retained the freshness of youth, and the land which gave it birth had as yet escaped the bitterness of oppression.

The ideal standard of individual perfection, from a physical point of view, was, that the man should be tall in stature, slender in form, strong, able, clear-eyed, having small heels, long arms, and handsome calves; while the woman should be conspicuous for beauty, elegance of figure, and symmetry of shape, having a slender waist and large full eyes; other feminine graces are light complexion, especially about the arms, small slender fingers, and a well-formed bosom. The aim of education was to make the child an able and useful member of the community; "piety in thought, word, and action" being the guiding star of the early Iranians; or the warrior taught his sons the handling of weapons and the use of the bow, the lance, and the sword; the peasant took his children out with him to the plough to scatter seed, or gather in corn; while the priest initiated his offspring into the mysteries of holiness, and taught them to reverence the Creator of Heaven and Earth. Thus time passed on, till youths and maidens were invested with the sacred string, a symbol that they were true, perfect citizens of the State, the men as such entitled to bear arms, to take part in the meetings and councils of the village community; the women in like manner assuming thereon a position in the family circle befitting their years and the "outward and visible sign" of majority with which they had been invested.

Amongst the Parsis, as indeed, with all Oriental nations, marriage is a duty incumbent upon the nation at large; but with them the wife ranks more as the equal of the husband than as his dependent. She is not his slave, but his companion, entitled to all his privileges, and sharing with him the direction and management of the household. Upon the man devolved the duty of labouring with his hands to procure daily food for the family, the wife's sphere of action being indoors attending to domestic wants and comforts. Whether the Iranians of old were restricted to one wife is open to doubt; and there seems a probability that, following in this matter, the instincts of the Eastern nations, they took when able to support them as many as their soul lusted after, though, as a matter of fact, it is equally the fact that pressure of circumstances and the struggle for daily bread forced the large majority of the nation to monogamy. Be this, however, as it may, the Avesta did not prohibit plurality of wives.

Daily life being, according to the tenets of Zoroaster, a conflict with the power of darkness, it behoveth every true believer to be "instant in prayer;" so on rising, washing, dressing, eating, sleeping, the protection of the Ruler of the Universe is invoked, and on special occasions special forms of supplication are employed, impurities must be removed, sins blotted out, bodies purified, and souls cleansed. The religion of the Parsis is essentially a religious faith, its votaries are no idle, slothful sensualists, but watchful, prayerful, devotees, always on the alert to deprecate evil, to supplicate good.

Death is regarded as a separation of the soul and body, though the final divorcement does not take place till three days and three nights have passed; when this interval has elapsed, the body falls a prey to the powers of evil, which send forth a demon known as "Druj-nasush" to take possession of the corpse. This terrible monster is typified by a fly, probably because that insect is always to be seen in the wake of death and corruption; but by a strange superstition a dog is supposed to have the power of scaring away the Evil Being; so it is customary amongst the Parsis to lead this latter animal towards a deceased member of the fraternity; this ceremony of the "Sagdid" completed, the corpse is placed on a "tower" till it resolves itself into its natural elements. Thus much for the body: as regards the soul, Dr. Geiger treats at some length the Eschatology of the Parsis.

On the beginning of the fourth day after death the gates of heaven are opened, and the soul passes over the Bridge which separates Paradise from the mundane sphere; here the Spirit of Justice stands, holding a pair of scales in his hands, ready to weigh good and evil deeds against each other; the balance decides the fate of the trembling expectant. The good pass on, and meet a fragrant breeze wafted from the regions of the blessed, while conscience takes the form of a charming maiden, who hastens to welcome the newly-arrived visitant. This done, the soul enters successively the place of "good thoughts," of "good words," and of "good works;" the fourth, or last stage, being the region of imperishable splendour, where the Creator of Heaven and Earth dwells throughout the endless ages of Eternity with the blessed Spirits of the Just. On the other hand, the wicked soul that has been "weighed in the balance and found wanting" passes towards the region of the condemned; on the way a foul wind coming from the north meets it, while conscience is embodied by an old hag. Then the portals of Hell are opened with its places of evil thoughts, evil words, and evil works; and lastly, there is Jahannam itself, peopled by demons, and furnished by the Prince of Hell with most foul and nauseous eatables, loathsome to the taste of men. The subject is full of interest, and it has been carefully and minutely treated by Dr. Geiger, whose work merits, and will doubtless receive, careful perusal by all those who wish to gain an intelligent knowledge of a sect, small in number, but endued with virtues which have made the name of Parsi synonymous with piety, beneficence, loyalty and honour. A work of praise is due to Darab Dastur Perhotan Saiyana, who has ably translated the German text into English, a task of no inconsiderable difficulty, considering that both these languages are, in his case, foreign tongues.

KOPAL-KUNDALA, A TALE OF BENGALI LIFE.*

Forced by the waves of the Ganges sacred stream, the bodies of Nobokumar and Kopal-Kundala seemed, as it were, to proclaim once again the oft-repeated truth that in "Death they were not divided." What was the story of their lives?

In the time of the illustrious Akbar it chanced that a solitary wanderer who had left a pilgrim boat on the Ganges in search of firewood found himself alone in the midst of a pathless jungle. Bewildered and perplexed he suddenly came face to face with a maiden of surpassing beauty; but who was this unknown and incomprehensible enchantress? None other than a hapless captive in the hands of an ascetic residing in those parts for the purpose of making human sacrifices to the God whom he had been taught to worship. She herself, indeed, was awaiting her time at the blood-stained altar. But destiny had willed otherwise, and the romantic and accidental meeting of Kopal-Kundala and Nobokumar, led them to link their fates and flee for their lives. The two were now man and wife. When they emerged from the forest, and came to the scene of civilization, the faithful spouse engaged a "palki" (travelling litter) for his wife, but once again the finger of chance turned the current of life; the pair got separated in the darkness, and for a second time Nobokumar became a solitary wanderer. Restless and perplexed, he strayed in every direction, seeking traces of the missing "palki." His search was rewarded by the discovery not of the hapless Kopal-Kundala, but of a matron of no less surpassing beauty and loveliness, who had been robbed and plundered on the road. Gallantry and chivalry prompted him to succour her in her distress, so the two journeyed on till they reached a "rest home," where it happened, too, that the bride of his choice had preceded him. But Nobokumar was true to his queen, and the lady he had rescued, despite her unrivalled elegance, did not shake the fidelity of his love; they parted, she to resume her journey to the Upper Provinces of the north-west, he to continue his way to the land of his home in Bengal.

But the glance of his eyes had enamoured the fickle heart of the lady whom he had befriended: and amidst the gay and licentious pleasures of the luxurious city of Agra, when dallying with princes and toying with a king, her heart wandered to the humbler but more peaceful abode of the citizen of Bengal. Impulsive and headstrong, she suddenly resolved to quit the scenes of her triumphs, and bidding adieu to the monarch Jahangir, who, on the death of his father, had succeeded to the throne of the Moguls, she repaired with anxious steps to the village where Nobokumar resided, and taking up her abode in the neighbourhood, tried to win back a heart she had once possessed, proclaiming herself in due course to the astonished rustic as the wife of his bosom, whom he had in bygone years discarded for her faithlessness and misconduct. But in the interval a rival had sprung up in the person of the hateful and hated Kopal-Kundala. Henceforth the energies of the unprincipled Queen of Agra were centred in the death of her who stood between the wife and her husband; her plots, her titles, her wickedness, and the results and ends thereof, will excite interest and repay perusal.

The novel, in the shape of Mr. Phillips's most admirable translation, though essentially indicative of the Oriental school of thought, is by no means devoid of character, and a casual half-hour may be far worse spent than in reading the romantic history of Kopal-Kundala.

WHAT a thing it is to have a bad climate. In early historic times the people on the western coasts of Gaul—the present France—believed that their dead were carried by mariners over the sea to the foggy and gloomy Britannia.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THE ABOLITION OF THE INDIAN NAVY.

ONE of the inconveniences of a world-wide Empire is that, however you may employ troops of other races than your own, it is always needful to admix a certain leaven of your own soldiers. We had, during the period antecedent to the Indian mutinies of 1857, an average of some 70,000 English soldiers in India. We had also Native troops to the number of 230,000. This proportion of one to three or four was found to be insufficient when the pinch came, and most of our native troops rebelled. Of the European soldiers the most useful, some 5,000 or 6,000 in number, were men who served exclusively in India. The absurdity of the Queen's and John Company's recruiting sergeants bidding against one another in the same market, used to be an endless theme of ridicule for the—too often ridiculous—Press. Yet the evil was more apparent than real. Men had their choice of service in one vast country, or all over the globe. Variety pleases some, as little things are said to please little minds; though, what with the hills and the plains, there is diversity enough in India to satisfy any ordinary appetite. Yet, to transfer a regiment from Canada, where the thermometer is often many degrees below zero, to India, where the same indicator of temperature runs up nearly to half way to boiling point, scarcely seemed the height of wisdom. For this reason, among many others, that much maligned entity, "the wisdom of Parliament," went so far as to place under military discipline the European regiments of the company. Soldiers desire, no more than other folk, to be acclimatised half-a-dozen times, to serve one day near the Pole, and, soon after, under the Equator. But the European Regiments of the East India Company furnished a body of men thoroughly trustworthy and thoroughly inured to the climate. Let it never be forgotten how Neill, with his Madras Europeans, brought up in hot haste from their own Presidency, cleared, in the heat of summer, the 120 miles from Howrah to Raneegunge in 115 minutes (by rail, of course), and were "the first in at the death" in the North-West. It was a feat which freshly-landed "Queen's Regiments" would hardly have attempted; and what the value of the presence, in the Upper Provinces, of that body of disciplined and acclimatised troops really was, can only be estimated, if one will try to conceive what the condition of affairs would have been, had they not been there.

"Superior wisdom" deemed it right to abolish separate recruiting of English soldiers for India. There is not an old Indian, not even those who have benefited by its institution, who will not acknowledge that the Staff Corps has been a needless and costly failure.

The same extravagant policy was pursued at sea as on land.

We had, in the Indian Navy, which had existed, in more or less complete form, since 1600, a fleet of twenty excellent vessels, besides eleven transports, all commanded by officers thoroughly acquainted with the littoral of the Red Sea, the East Coast of Africa, the Persian Gulf, and the whole coast line of Beloochistan and India, and manned by crews well used to the special work on which they would, in the ordinary course of service, be employed; work which, to officers and men fresh from England, would be wholly novel. Every portion of the seas washing these thousands of miles of coast had been repeatedly surveyed, though there are, perhaps, no seas in the world which, on account of the inconceivable number, and constantly varying height, of the coral reefs, it is at once more necessary and more difficult to survey satisfactorily.

Moreover, the Indian Navy undertook the police of the entire waters above mentioned. By systematic patrolling, piracy in the Red Sea and in the Persian Gulf was practically annihilated, and slave dealing, once so prevalent, efficiently checked. Moreover, the duty, to which we are bound by "solemn covenant" to provide for the naval peace of the Gulf, and protect the chiefs along its shore, was most efficiently performed; whereas, now, the chiefs, enjoying the same rights to protection, scarce see a ship of war in a year to show them on what they can rely in case of need. Not to say that the Indian Navy was the best of schools for the acquisition of that colloquial knowledge of Arabic which, in all exigencies of actual service, is infinitely more useful than a merely scholastic acquaintance, however accurate, with the grammar and inflexions of that difficult language.

The knowledge, acquired by experience, of the Oriental seas, was for a long time regarded as a kind of peculium of the Indian Navy; and, at a time when the Red Sea is traversed, by almost as many vessels as the British Channel, it is interesting to recall to mind that the first steamer, the Hindustan, sent out by the world-renowned Peninsular and Oriental Company, was commanded by a well-known captain (Moresby) of the Indian Navy. And for the best of reasons. There was no Suez Canal. The Red Sea and adjacent waters were not, as now, peopled by ships; and scarce any one but one but officers of the Indian Navy could safely navigate a steamer among the intricate passages, between the coral banks and shoals, which abound at every point.

Nor is independent professional testimony wanting, as will presently appear, to the singular efficiency and exceptional value of the Indian Navy.

One naturally asks why such a service was ever broken up? Sir James Elphinstone, when a Lord of the Treasury, has, perhaps, expressed as pithily as any one what has been lost by this stupid move, originating in a sort of vague, misdirected, idea of uniformity. We quote from the Introduction to Low's "History of the Indian Navy:—

"I have taken," wrote Sir James, "the greatest interest in a service which had in a short time produced more men of varied ability as diplomatists, surveyors, navigators, and explorers, than any service of similar dimensions in the world; and I could only wonder at the fatuity of a Government in breaking up such an establishment."

An officer whose authority on naval matters will not be denied by any one, the present Lord Alcester, then Sir F. Beauchamp Seymour, thus wrote in 1877:—

"No person regretted more than I did the abolition of this gallant service. In my opinion no greater mistake was ever made. It was a service which ranked among its officers some of the finest and best fellows I have ever met during a career of over forty-three years. . . . Their knowledge of Eastern languages, and of the countries in which they served so continuously, countries never or rarely visited at that time by my brother officers, was of the greatest possible service to us all."

The old Indian Navy has been abolished, some hundreds of thousands of pounds have been produced from "the sweat of the mild Hindoo" as the cost of its abolition, and the mischief is done. It is proverbially useless to "cry over spilt milk." But it is not useless to inquire whether, if we cannot altogether retrace our steps, we cannot in some measure repair the mischief occasioned by a stupid blunder. Whether the Suez Canal be, in case of war, blocked or not, it is clear that our own, as well as our enemy's, first objective point, would be Bombay. And, as a gallant admiral, perhaps the highest authority on the subject, wrote to us the other day, "the only remedy is a strong fleet always at Bombay, where several docks should exist."

How far this opinion, in which we fully concur, has been acted on, may be gathered from the subjoined extract from the Bombay Gazette:—

The East India Squadron does not at present contain one vessel capable of patrolling the high seas in time of war without the assured prospect of finding its destination in Davy Jones's locker or in an enemy's port. And barring two monitors of an obsolete type in Bombay, it has no vessel which would float for half an hour in the defence of our port before the Vladimir Monomach with its ten inches of armour, its six 9½-ton and twelve 4½-ton guns, or of the Minon, armour-cased seven inches thick, and carrying sixteen guns of the above sizes.

Nothing can be more condemnatory of the neglect invariably shown where Indian interests are concerned, and of the all but invariable plan of giving the Indian Secretaryship, like some sinecure, to the weakest member of the Cabinet.

It does not rest with us to do more than to point out that, considering the "wealth beyond the dreams of avarice" which our seaports in India contain, it is simply an act of fatuity to leave them practically open to an enemy's cruiser. A good many millions would have to be found for the ransom from bombardment of such commercial ports as Bombay, Kurrachee, and Rangoon. No mere expenditure of some £7,000 for all India on a "torpedo establishment" can be considered as more than what medical men call a placebo—something to keep the patient, that is, the Indian public, tolerably quiet, not to mention the moral effect throughout the country of a threatened bombardment of any one of even the smaller ports.

Not to speak of the Surveys which, with coral islands growing apace throughout the Indian seas, are, practically, almost in abeyance. What would be the outcry if a brand-new ironclad going out to India—if poor India ever saw such a thing—came to be lost on a coral reef which had grown up, since the last survey, years ago, sufficiently to sink her, and possibly half her crew?

We commend the entire subject, to which we propose to recur, to the earnest, and very early, attention of any Government which desires to do even-handed justice as between England and India.

OBITUARY.

THE death of General Ulysses Grant, the subduer of the Confederacy of the Southern States of America, and the President for two terms of four years of the United States, deserves, perhaps, more space than we can spare for a full notice of the event. We extract from the United States Gazette a few remarks on the earliest points in his career. He had lingered so long that some faint hopes were entertained in the States that he might ultimately recover. General Grant was one of the great military figures of the age, although posterity will hardly rank him as among the greatest generals. What was needed was resolution, determination, and will, and these General Grant possessed to a consummate extent. He recognised that the only plan to conquer the Confederates was to wear them down, and he set to work with his iron will to do so. He had unlimited resources at his back, practically unlimited forces, while the Confederates were almost bare of resources, cut off from the outside world, limited as to means. In such a contest the issue could not be doubtful, if the general in command of the superior forces had but the resolution to shrink from no expenditure of life to carry out his object, and was backed by men equally determined. Supported by Lincoln and his Cabinet, Grant set to work to wear out the Confederacy, and he succeeded; but the loss of life that the process entailed was something terrific. Grant had the power of inspiring not only his men, but the nation, with absolute confidence in him, and this is undoubtedly one of the highest and most useful attributes that a general can possess. Had he not possessed it, he could never have carried his campaign to a successful issue. No general was more simple in his tastes, more unaffected, or more modest. It is a pity that he accepted the Presidency, for he was assuredly no statesman. But, taken all in all, Grant was a great man—certainly one of the great men of his age.

A LADY not long ago paid a visit to a Government department in this country charged with the care of letters; on her return she narrated to her astonished friends thus:—She had been to see some "general" whom she knew not. "The military officer" turned out to be the "Postmaster General."

"They cannot possibly make Lord Randolph Churchill Secretary of State for India," say the Indians, "it would never do to violate the maxim ne puero gladium." But it is done, and why not? His chief disqualification is that he knows where Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay are without reference to an expert.

DUTY of every kind has in it the elements of pleasure, and, if we do not discover and appropriate them it is our own fault. If we study the principles of our life-work, dwell upon its details, and strive to perfect it as much as possible, we shall insensibly learn to love it, and feel no sacrifice for it a burden.

SYDNEY SMITH's recipe for cheerfulness is not to have one motive only in the day for living, but a number of little motives. A man who from the time he rises till bed-time conducts himself like a gentleman, who throws some little condescension into his manner to inferiors, and who is always contriving to soften the distance between himself and the poor and ignorant, is always improving his animal spirit and adding to his happiness.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 4, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, July 14th; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, July 12th.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs, under date 2nd inst:—

CALCUTTA, Aug. 2.—The latest authentic news received from Cabul presents but few features of interest. The Ameer is busily engaged in despatching troops to reinforce Herat and the north-west frontier, and in raising fresh regiments to fill the gaps left by their departure. It is also stated that he loses no opportunity of proclaiming the value which he sets upon the British alliance and his confidence in British help. The story of the revolt by Isa Khan, in Badakshan, which caused some excitement not long ago, has proved to be altogether false. Afghan Turkestan is quite peaceful.

It is stated that an enterprising Parsee firm at Peshawur has agreed, at the Ameer's request, to open a shop in Cabul.

The members of the Boundary Commission still occupy their former camp. Their health is good. The surveying operations are steadily continued. Although no official announcement on the subject has yet been made, the belief still grows that a large force will be despatched to Pishin, if not to Candahar, in the autumn. It is not unlikely that a strong body of troops will be quartered in the Pishin Valley before November. It is reported that General MacGregor will at once select a site for an intrenched camp.

OUR readers know the reasons which induce us to place so high a value on cordial friendship with Turkey. We pointed out, weeks ago, how we were slighting the Sultan by leaving our relations with him for months under the Chargé d'Affaires, and are not surprised that matters have improved even under a pro tem. British Minister. The sooner a permanent appointment is made the better:—

Political interest is now centred in the expected arrival of Sir Henry Drummond Wolff. A better feeling towards England is discernible in official spheres, dating from the arrival and reception by the Sultan of Sir William White, the British Minister pro tem, and the accession to office of the Salisbury Ministry. The Turkish newspapers—all under a strict censorship—now openly discuss the advantages of a good understanding with the English Government, and remark that it is easier to attain that object now that the Gladstone Administration has fallen, which, under the influence of its leader, was fanatically hostile to the Turks.

AT Berlin, too, we are thought better of since the change of Government:—

The balance of opinion here seems to be that England's position in the Afghan question has been considerably strengthened within the last few days. Lord Salisbury's speech at the Mansion House, which the Cologne Gazette characterizes as a statesman-like confession of faith, is discussed in the daily Press with considerable favour. It is recognised that Lord Salisbury, at least, whatever may be said of the younger members of his Cabinet, is fully conscious of the responsibility and difficulty of the task which he has in hand. The news that the Ameer of Afghanistan has consented to the formation of a fortified British camp in the south part of his dominions is regarded as an eminently practical token of his real belief in the advantage of England's friendship. England has here, according to the North German Gazette, made an important and successful move in the game of chess with Russia, and one that increases the hope of peace.

REUTER reports from Simla, under date Aug. 3, a step which seems to us to be one decidedly in the right direction:—

The question of increasing the numerical strength of the Indian Native Army is receiving the special attention of the Government at the present time. The proposal which is being considered, and which is said to meet with the approval of the Government, is to add two companies to each battalion of infantry, and a squadron to each regiment of cavalry. It is understood that the difficulty between England and Russia in no way prompted the present consideration of this scheme, which has only come before the Government for discussion in the ordinary course.

THE Native papers are unusually devoid of interest. We must say that we agree, with the Rast Goftar, that some support, of course under due restrictions, might fairly have been accorded by Government to the proposed Bombay Exhibition. It is never worth while to disgust people for the sake of a trifle. Says the Rast Goftar:—

The work over which our whole city had gone into ecstasies about eighteen months ago, and for which all the well-known citizens of Bombay had guaranteed amounts beyond their means, the work on the strength of which rents had gone up, has been undone by the mere stroke of a pen in the shape of a Government Resolution. In refusing to give the necessary guarantee we think the Government have shown unnecessary timidity. It has been accepted from the beginning that the guarantors will have scarcely to pay anything. The result, therefore, is very painful. It is a black spot on the fair fame of Bombay. It does discredit to the commercial integrity of the city. It is a loss to the whole of India. The principal blame of this failure should be laid at the door of the London Exhibition, for which the Bombay Exhibition has been sacrificed.

It is most satisfactory to read in the Bombay Gazette that the reorganisation of the Sappers and Miners in India has been taken in hand by the military authorities. We are glad to read what follows:—

An up-country paper remarks that there is none of that presidential jealousy which is a drag upon most branches of the army. The Bengal Sappers viewed with marked admiration the splendid work done in the Khyber by their brothers from Madras; the detachment of Bombay Sappers at Maiwand made a heroic stand around the guns in that action and were killed almost to a man. Everywhere, in fact, of late years where our Indian Sappers have taken the field they have worked admirably, and when called upon to fight have displayed a bravery which has placed them in the first rank of combatants. It is stated that a new equipment will be given to the corps, and that generally their status will be improved.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Morning Post writes from Vienna:—

The report that Russian troops are being massed before Zulfikar is not contradicted in Russian circles. A member of the Russian Embassy told me last night that no mystery was made at St. Petersburg of this, the measure having been taken in consequence of the constant arrival of Afghan troops in that direction.

THE Native papers still speak of Native volunteering. They do not seem to understand—nor do we—why all volunteering by Native gentlemen should, as a matter of course, be tabooed. On this subject we wrote fully, a few weeks ago, in an article which, we are glad to see, has obtained the approval of many of the Indian papers. Yet, as the Italians say, "Su! Su! Coraggio!" Hope on! What kind of a welcome did our own first volunteers meet with at the War Office? The political atmosphere was, if possible, blacker than at present. The strutting French Colonels—how suitably is the Gallic individual described by the cock (Gallus) from which he would almost seem to derive his name!—had sung their "Cock-a-doodle-doo," and were going to London with the cœur léger which induced their ridiculous cry "A Berlin," and ended in their losing two of their most fertile provinces.

WE are, to our deep regret, old enough to remember all this, and how long the funereal shade of official displeasure hung over volunteering, and all things thereto appertaining, in this country. Even now the self-devotion of our volunteer regiments has been ignored to such an extent, that some of them are not yet furnished with the best weapons; and that, as regards their discipline—more willing troops never existed, they only want encouragement—one of the foreign service papers thinks them quite as likely to be "smashed" in reality now as they were in the mythic "Battle of Dorking" some fifteen years ago.

YET they have gradually struggled—may we not say agonised?—into official recognition. And there is no reason why Native volunteers should not similarly come to the fore. We shall heartily welcome them. Surely, better to utilize for the benefit of the Empire the widespread military talents and enthusiasm which, as all history teaches, are latent—should we not rather say suppressed?—in India, than to let them be developed, as in Ireland, in holes and corners, to our prejudice. Can any one suppose that the martial spirit of the Rohillas and Mahrattas was evanescent, and has vanished into thin air? Why not avail ourselves of it? Esprit de corps, once engendered, will work wonders.

THE fact is, as we are almost weary of repeating, that we, as a nation, do not, from a blindness which we hope is not "judicial," half utilise our resources. Take Suakin. Europeans and Indians are dying by hundreds. Did no one at the War Office—but, under the late Government the War Office was supposed to know nothing, see nothing, and do nothing—ever hear of such a thing as a West India Regiment?

AND why not have enlisted some Arabs? We know to our cost what splendid fellows they are, how they can fight, and that they will do anything for money.

SPEAKING of the "Battle of Dorking," we may refer to a little pamphlet called "Russia's Next Move towards India" (Simpkin, Marshall and Co.), which has just come into our hands, and which gives an imaginary account of a battle on the North-Western frontier of India. The Government are represented to have looked for an attack in flank on the railway station at Sibi. Not a bit of it. The Russians had avoided the Kojak, had taken a route scarcely known to the Intelligence Department, and had entered the Borai Valley to the north-east of Peshin!

THAT this route exists, that it has been often taken by invaders of India from the North-West, and that the Gbilzais—who surely ought to know somewhat about the matter—think it the easiest of all, is proved by official reports.

And whither does it lead? To a plateau of the size of Ireland, a "resting-place" 5,000 feet above sea level, with fine forests and pasture lands. No better route for an invader, now, as heretofore. Being within easy distance of our considerable cantonment at Quetta, and, therefore, of Sibi, where troops are broiling in what Sir W. Meredith (who knew Aden) said was the hottest place he had ever been in, why cannot this plateau be made available for troops which, when not actually required at Quetta, would be within call, and in a healthy climate? One of the recent numbers of "Letts's Popular Atlas," now in course of publication, gives an excellent delineation of the whole province, every mile of which may soon become an object of contention.

We read in the Bombay Gazette that, in order to provide for possible emergencies, much money "has been spent on Ordnance stores in England for India in addition to the outlay" in India itself. As regards these "Ordnance stores," will it be thought very rude to inquire whether they have been sent out? Some weeks back we suggested a return of the number of guns of large calibre asked for by the Government of India, and of guns delivered; and we still hope that, even in these last days of an expiring Parliament, this return may be insisted on, and made also to include all Ordnance stores. The Indian Governments are prohibited from catering for themselves except through the India Office; the latter never can get anything in reasonable, or, indeed, in any definite, time, through the War Office. And so the thing goes on. To take but one instance. We have reduced poor Madras to such a state of hopelessness that it positively is in ecstasy at the prospect—which may (or may not) be realised a few years hence—of obtaining four guns to defend the entire sea front! About as efficient a protection as putting a few pop-guns in front of Brighton! Poor Madrassesees! Hope on!

We hope that the Government in India is not going to follow a course which the present Government have proposed in England, and which we consider erroneous, and, in principle, vicious—namely, that of requiring seaports to contribute to their own protection. Those who chance to live at, or near, the coast, pay the same taxes as those who live inland. Do these taxes represent the protection of the whole, or only of a part, of the country? We assuredly see no earthly reason why an inhabitant of Bombay should pay more than one who lives in Poona, any more than we can conceive a reasonable ground for an inhabitant of Hull being mulcted in a higher ratio than a denizen of York.

THE Naval and Military Gazette has begun an illustrated series of articles, which promises to be both interesting and instructive, on the Russian army. As yet, of course, only the fringe, so to speak, of the subject has been touched. But we have never seen anything so portentous as the picture (p. 113) of the Horse Guard with a huge spread-eagle surmounting his helmet. It reminds one of nothing so much as of the lady who was reported by the servant-maid to have appeared at a ball "with a turbot on her head, if you please, m'm, and a whale a'top of that."

THE Native Press are by no means at one on the subject of the late Sir S. Fitzgerald. Here are two opposite utterances:—

Sir Seymour was appointed Governor of Bombay at a very critical period—viz., when Bombay was suffering from the effects of share-mania folly. He was able partly to undo, by his strong will, the mischief which had been done through the weak policy of Sir Barde Frere's Government. Sir Seymour Fitzgerald did all that was expected of a strong-minded governor to mitigate the evil. He was rather a pleasure-loving governor, and though he did little good, he did no harm to the public that was under his charge.—Bombay Samachar.

When Sir Seymour Fitzgerald left the shores of India, general disappointment was expressed at his weak administration. He had not fulfilled the expectations formed of him. It was during his régime that the Gunesh Khind palace was built, of which due notice was taken in the Finance Committee, then sitting in London. During his governorship the Government House was one scene of continued gaities, balls, and dinner parties. We will do him the justice to say that the Native enjoyed a fair share of the hospitality. But, in short, he was a failure.—Jam-i Jamshed.

We quote from the Englishman a translation of one or two opinions on the probable influence on Indian affairs of the change of Government:—

The Conservatives objected to the manner in which Mr. Gladstone acted; therefore who can say that they will not act contrary to his policy? It is probable that, in the régime of the war-loving and proud Conservatives, a war with Russia will soon break out. We are rice-eating Bengalis; we are unable to judge the merits or demerits of a war between the British Lion and the Russian Bear; but we can understand that it will bring disaster upon disaster on ourselves. Therefore on the change of Ministry we are overpowered with fear.—The Pravikar.

If the administration of the Tories continue for some time, and Lord Randolph Churchill hold office, God alone knows what we shall do. Indeed, we have really become apprehensive on account of the accession of the Tory Government to Power, and their present policy with regard to India.—The Sahachar.

THE two subjoined extracts from Native papers give expression to views already enunciated by us:—

THE CENTRAL ASIAN CRISIS.—If the Amir be so far friendly to the English, why have the English engineers not been allowed to remain in Herat? The Amir says that, if they remain there, the people of Herat may do them injury. If it be true that the Amir has no control over his subjects, we cannot understand why he should be given money and guns as bribes. From his behaviour it appears that the generality of the people of Afghanistan are hostile to the English. When such is the case, we cannot understand why the English are anxious for the delimitation of the Afghan frontier.—The Burdwan Sanjibani.

NATIVE VOLUNTEERS.—Lord Dufferin will commit a great blunder if his lordship do not order the formation of separate volunteer corps for the Natives of India. The whole population will not be enlisted as volunteers. They are insane who say that the educated Natives of India (residents of towns) will turn hostile to the English rule if guns are entrusted to their hands. The educated Natives of India understand the benefits of English rule. Besides, they are few in number; and even if they turn hostile, the English will have no cause for apprehension. Only the other day an experienced Englishman, in an excellent article, explained the subject to Government. In spite of that, if Lord Dufferin do not grant the prayers of the Natives of India, then will no one blame him?—The Samacharchandrika.

The Morning Post gives news which will be hailed by all who have passed a stifling night in the "Ditch." It says:—

The public, especially those interested in the passage to and from India, will be gratified to learn that the lighting of the Suez Canal during night is to be improved by the addition of four of Pintsch's patent gas buoys. These will show a red light, visible for ten miles, and only require charging with the compressed oil gas once in six weeks. The navigation of the canal at night will be greatly expedited by their introduction.

We hope so, indeed; the change will not have come before it was needed.

COLONEL STANTON'S discovery of petroleum at Khatun, in Beloochistan, may have far-reaching consequences. We must not forget that the Russian Transcaucasian Railway is all but entirely worked with engines consuming petroleum. We take this extract from the Indian Daily News:—

Colonel Stanton gives some particulars, in his last Railway Administration Report, of the experimental petroleum boring at Khatun, in the Beluchistan Agency. Operations were commenced in July last, and after some considerable difficulties had been overcome two veins of oil were struck at 28 feet and 36 feet depth, respectively. In March drilling was stopped, a pump improvised, and the oil tested. During the hour or more that the pumping continued the yield was a thick stream of oil over 6 inches in diameter. The next day pumping was continued for seven and a-half hours, with the result that about 2,000 gallons of oil were collected, with no appearance of its giving out. Further arrangements for additional borings, and to carry the drillings to a greater depth, in view to obtaining a lighter kind of oil, are in progress. Meanwhile, that obtained is being used in the boiler furnaces with very satisfactory results, and it is proposed to adapt some of the engines of the Sind-Peshin Railway for experiments with the oil as fuel.

THOSE who have even tolerable memories will not have forgotten Russia's discovery, after the Crimean war, of two Bolgrads, the possession of one of which—not the one contemplated by the Treaty of Paris—would have given her the entire control of the mouths of the Danube; and will remember how, when Lord Palmerston declared he would not hesitate to recommence the war, were this point not settled to his satisfaction, the bankrupt Empire "caved in." A Ministry, so many of whose members, however able, are still comparatively young, may profitably be reminded of this, à propos of the discovery of two Zulfikars. Russia will cave in again, if properly met.

It was said of old that Homer sometimes has his forty winks. Surely the same must be said of (our) Jupiter. Speaking of the excellent appointment of Sir F. Roberts to the post—of which the importance, at the present time, cannot be overrated, of commander-in-chief in India—"Jupiter" says that "Sir Donald Stewart entered the Bengal Staff Corps forty-five years ago." We need hardly trouble Macaulay's "schoolboy" to inform Jupiter that the Staff Corps did not come into existence till after the Mutiny.

THE (now confirmed) death of the Mahdi from so loathsome a disease as small-pox, the most revolting to the Mahomedans, will be a strong devil's advocate should it be proposed to consider him a member of the band of other than false prophets. His decease must materially affect the nature of our action, both political and military, in Southern Egypt. On this head the well-informed Neue Free Presse of Vienna writes:—

The Mahdi's death quenches all the fire in the Soudanese movement. Divested of its religious character, the movement loses its political significance and collapses to the proportions of a local event. A wild war among the tribes will next be witnessed in the Soudan, and the Mahdi's obscure successor, though he is the nephew of the deceased leader, and is endowed with the title of Khalif, will be fortunate if he escapes with his life out of the coming troubles. For England, and one may say for the world, the False Prophet's death is an unmixed good. England may now leave the Soudan to its fate, and the Soudanese question being thus disposed of, the settlement of the Egyptian question must certainly become much more easy.

LISTEN, O enthusiasts, and give ear, O Exeter Hall! "It is quite time that the advance was made, for it has long been patent to the world that the so-called opposition of Chinese statesmen to the importation of Indian opium was only a cover for their design of amassing wealth by taxing the Chinese poppy and smuggling the Indian drug." Just so; but what says the Anti-Opium Society to a fact which has been known to everyone but themselves for years past? Listen once again to the Pioneer. "One very exalted official, indeed, the possessor of many buttons, gained some few years ago much honour among the missionaries for the firm stand which he made against the 'iniquitous traffic.' He even went so far as to issue a proclamation to his troops against the 'degraded habit,' and when he was transferred from the government of one province to another, part of his personal luggage consisted of four junks laden with smuggled opium, which he sold for much money in the new market." Verily, John Chinaman is shrewd, and the British public easily gulled, especially when religious zeal and intolerance come into play.

"WE have drunk the cup of humiliation to the dregs, and if an attempt be made to replenish it we may strike it so rudely that it shall never be proffered again." Such is the description of the Afghan situation at the present moment penned by the Pioneer correspondent at Simla. This is a touch of patriotism which is refreshing.

The postage on a daily newspaper in India is about one shilling, while in England it is one halfpenny. Observe the result. THIS is how they do things in China. The extract is from the Japan Weekly Mail:—"The unfortunate ex-detective, Tsao Si-yung, in whose behalf the foreign residents of Shanghai laboured, last year, with, perhaps, more vigour than discretion, has been brought back from Soochow to Shanghai. His state is described by the North China Daily News as most lamentable. 'According to accounts which we have heard from those who have seen him,' says that journal, 'he shows terrible signs of the sufferings he has undergone. One of his wrists has been broken in the torture; and at present his wrists and legs are chained together, while his hands are kept extended from his face by a piece of bamboo fastened at one end to his wrists and at the other to a chain round his neck. This bamboo is only removed while the wretched prisoner is taking his meals, for which his tormentors allow him only a few brief minutes, hurrying him all the time and demanding money from him in return for any slight relief from his sufferings which they may allow him. Si-yung stoutly denies ever having signed the confession to get which he has been tortured, stating that his hand was seized, his thumb dipped by main force into the ink, and then placed at the foot of the confession, this being taken as a signature. He says his gaolers have told him that he is to be kept for two years imprisoned in Shanghai, and is then to be sent back to Soochow. Verily are Chinese officials more savage than the beasts.' The unhappy man may have a stout heart, but we should think that by this time he is beginning to pray for deliverance from his friends."

ACROSS AFRICA.*

In the year of grace 1875 a band of ten weary and footsore travellers dragged their half-dead bodies into the settlement of Katumbela, on the west coast of Africa. The party consisted of five Natives and one European, the latter in such a state of disease that he was unable to speak or swallow, his body being covered with blotches in various shades of purple, blue, black, and green, while the rest of his skin was deadly white. The hero was the intrepid Cameron, the first European who had ever succeeded in crossing tropical Africa from east to west. Leaving him in the hands of a kindly French doctor, who looked to the suffering patriot's wants and needs, let us take a glance at the adventurous journey.

The party, consisting of Captain Cameron, Dr. Dillon, Lieut. Murphy, Mr. Moffat, a nephew of the celebrated missionary of that name, and a medley of attendants, some Arabs, some Natives of the place, numbering in all about 500 souls, started from the coast on the 28th of March, 1873. The difficulties and hardships which they encountered even thus early on their journey may be gathered from the fact, that two months had barely elapsed ere the remains of the youthful Moffat were consigned to their last resting-place beneath a tall palm-tree; thus another martyr was added to the list of those who sacrificed their lives to the toils of African discovery. Sad in heart at this unfortunate mishap, the little band of Europeans proceeded on their way, but only themselves to fall ill from the fatal fever which had carried off one of their number. So ill, indeed, that when a letter from the well-known Jacob Wainwright, announcing the death of Livingstone, met them as they plodded along, both Cameron and Dillon were too weak in body, too confused in intellect, to understand the purport of the missive, or to realize who it was that had been gathered to his ancestors. Of the two thus struck down, one, Dr. Dillon, lingered on for a while, but on the 18th of November, in a delirium of fever, he shot himself through the brain, and was buried in the wild inhospitality of Central Africa. The party of four could now number but two, and their exploration had barely commenced.

One of the peculiarities of these regions now met the view of the travellers for the first time—the floating islands which abound in the large rivers. These masses vary in thickness and stability from year to year. They owe their origin to the rushes growing in the bed of the river impeding the course of floating débris, and causing it to accumulate and form soil for vegetation. Plants quickly spring up and flourish, and, interlacing their roots, a compact mass is the result. These islands grow for about six years, after which they begin to decay, finally disappearing after an interval of about five years. But to describe the adventures of the travellers, or to picture the varied scenes which met their eyes is needless. Suffice it to say, that all the chiefs were rapacious, unprincipled, hard drinkers, and filthy dirty; the women ugly, repulsive, and, for the most part, intolerably licentious; while to crown all, the travellers' attendants were idle, careless, and dishonest. They neglected their work, they did the most unheard of things, such as using their muskets as boathooks, and they robbed their masters of everything upon which they could lay their hands. Still the party progressed—but the four had dwindled to one. Murphy having retraced his steps, too ill to proceed, Cameron was left alone in the huge expanse of Central Africa. Stop; there was one other traveller, the faithful Leo, a noble dog, which had accompanied his master in all the fatigues of his tropical journey. But death was rapacious. Even this poor creature was destined to perish, having been bitten by a snake. The loss dealt a heavy blow to the poor lonesome wanderer, who, however, nothing daunted, with the characteristic pluck of an Englishman, journeyed on and on. But what horrors he was destined to endure; to say nothing of the miserable and sickening spectacle of slave-gangs being driven to the coast which met his eye at every turn. In some places he lived amongst cannibals, but cannibals so brutish, that they even ate diseased people; at other times he stayed with tribes so dead to decency, that when a woman dies her husband has to sleep one whole week with her loathsome, half-rotten, and putrefying corpse, and this in a tropical climate. Nay, more, Cameron himself had no soap for a whole year, and when he had achieved his adventurous task his woollen shirt was so rotten that it tumbled to pieces as he took it off his shoulders! The state of his body has already been described. But he had succeeded! and what does he tell us? His own words shall speak for themselves. "Africa is bleeding out her life-blood at every pore. A rich country, requiring only labour to render it one of the greatest producers in the world, is having its population—already far too scanty for its needs—daily depleted by the slave trade and internecine war. . . . And should England, with her mills working half time, and with distress in the manufacturing districts, neglect the opportunity of opening a market which would give employment to thousands of the working classes, it will ever remain an inexplicable enigma. Let us hope that the Anglo-Indian race will allow no other nation to outstrip it in the efforts to rescue thousands, nay, millions, of fellow creatures from the misery and degradation which must, otherwise infallibly fall to their lot."

Such is Central Africa; such Cameron's journey; such the prospect. The book is sure to be read with avidity; it appeals to the interests of the nation, and its author, modest as is his record of his efforts as a pioneer of civilization, will be esteemed as an indomitable, enterprising traveller, worthy of the good old times when England's venturesome sons opened out pastures new to their expectant comrades at home in this "right little, tight little island."

OBITUARY.

The Army and Navy Gazette records, in terms of well-merited eulogium, the services of the well-known Padre Whiting (whose death occurred the other day), than whom there could have been no better Chaplain-General. It says:—"The death of the Rev. W. J. Whiting, M.A., aged 76, at Clifton, recalls to memory his meritorious services. Mr. Whiting went to India in 1841, and acted as military chaplain at different stations till December, 1848. He was then about to return to England on leave; but finding that the army was assembled for the second Sikh war without the presence of a single chaplain, he at once volunteered to accompany the troops. After Ramnuggur, at great personal risk, he recovered the body of Colonel Havelock, 14th L.D. During the battle of Chillianwallah, when a crowd of terrified camp-followers was on the point of trampling on the wounded of the 24th Regiment, this energetic minister seized a long bamboo, and wielded it so effectually as to divert the stream of fugitives. After that battle, he obtained a strong escort, and went with them to find and bury the bodies of the killed. In this he was so successful that only four of his slain countrymen were left without Christian burial—men of the 29th Regiment, who were killed so far in advance that their bodies could not be recovered without a fresh struggle with the Sikhs. He held three services every Sunday, and at one of them no less than 257 officers took the Sacrament. He collected more than £1,100 for the widows and orphans, and for comforts for the wounded. After Goojerat, he raised a considerable sum, with which he relieved the sufferings of the wounded Sikhs. Of his multifarious services more might be said, but the above will suffice to show that "Padre Whiting" evinced extraordinary courage, energy, and devotion. He received the grateful acknowledgments, "in terms of the highest approbation," of the Governor-General, the Commander-in-Chief in India, and the Court of Directors, the war medal, and nothing more. Since Mr. Whiting retired on a pension in 1855, he devoted much of his time to scientific studies, and he occasionally officiated in some of the neighbouring churches.

INDIA is in alarm. Italian bees have been imported with remarkable success into the snug shores of the East; but will the bees be "uncanny" enough to lay up a store of honey, seeing that they can find flowers all the year round? How, too, are the poor creatures to hibernate, seeing that there is no winter? The wax, also, might take it into its head to melt in the very hot weather.

HERAT AND THE AFGHAN FRONTIER.

RUSSIA'S delay in concluding any "arrangement" as to the question of demarcating the Western Afghan boundary is very suspicious. But it is of a piece with the whole of the proceedings of the Tsar's Government. We were to send a Commissioner to "delimitate" the Frontier, there to be met by a Russian colleague of equal rank. We, acting honourably, sent the best man we had. An officer was nominated on the Russian side with strict orders to be too ill to "show up." Then it was proposed to the late effete Government here, that the Frontier should be "demarcated," not "delimited" (what may be the difference?), in London. It might as well have been delimited or demarcated at the North Pole. Our Government, or those who represented it, were avowedly ignorant of the district respecting which the negotiations were going on. And they were confronted by M. Lessar, who had just come from the country, and knew every mile of it. And no fool was Lessar. M. Giers, a man of Hebrew origin, and who, like the late Lord Beaconsfield, is a good judge of men, confessed that he had been agreeably disappointed in Lessar. "I thought," said he (alluding to M. de Staal's imperfect knowledge of English), "that I had sent to London a mere dictionary, but I find I have despatched thither a really clever diplomatist."

Yet our Government were in such a hurry to get out of the difficulty in which, but for their own flaccidity, they need never have been placed, that, though knowing that Mr. Condie Stephen and Sir P. Lumsden, both possessing equal local knowledge with Lessar, were actually on the road to London, they made an absolute surrender of their own and their ally's interest in return for an agreement, the real meaning of which they did not know. In fact, to use a homely phrase, they "bought a pig in a poke."

Thus we were, as usual, outwitted in diplomacy, just as we were outgeneralled by a lot of half-naked barbarians in the Soudan.

Now we are told that M. Lessar is to meet Sir Joseph Ridgeway, Sir Peter's successor. We don't believe one word of this, and it is instructive to see that it is not for a moment thought probable at St. Petersburg. The fact is, that Russia has not the slightest intention of sending out a commissioner. If Komaroff, or, more probably, Alikhanoff, act in accordance with their secret, by violating their ostensible orders, and by occupying strategic positions, who so distressed as the Russian Government? It is a system of hypocrisy throughout.

It is an old saying—we believe as old as the time of Theseus—that nothing happens without a cause. And the cause of all this evasion and pettifoggish equivocation on the part of Russia is simply her desire to beat England in what has been justly called the race to Herat.

What Herat is, has been so often, and so forcibly, stated, that it may seem almost superfluous to reiterate, in however condensed a form, what Colonel Malleon has so well urged in his book, "Herat, the Garden and Granary of Central Asia," yet it may not be wholly out of place to recall attention to a few facts respecting it.

"Herat," said Colonel Malleon, "is called the gate of India, because through it, and through it alone, the valleys can be entered which lead to the only vulnerable part of India. Those valleys, running nearly north and south, are protected to the east by inaccessible ranges, to the west by impracticable deserts." Alas, no longer impracticable. Whilst a British army held Herat, an invasion of India would be impossible. "The possession of Herat by Russia means the possession of the one line by which India can be invaded. . . . Place an army there and nothing need be brought from Europe."

The province, even under the present régime, produces, annually, according to Sir Charles Macgregor, no less than 22,000 tons of wheat; wine and oil are abundant. Verily a land flowing with milk and honey.

However, an army is not only food for powder, but also a consumer of powder unlimited. Once get Herat, and the materials even of this shall not be wanting; nor shall lead. "The mines," we read, "supply lead, iron, sulphur; the surface of many parts is laden with saltpetre; the willow and the poplar, which make the best charcoal, abound."

An empty sack cannot stand on its own bottom. An army, far from its base, can stand on nothing, so to speak. Here you have a base for an army of 100,000 men, ready made by nature. What would be the feeling in India were a Russian army of a tenth of that number, established at Herat?

Irrespective of the marvellous fertility of the province, its position is unrivalled. With the exception of the easily defensible northern passes, it commands, as above shown, every Russian approach to India. It blocks the direct approach through Kandahar, and flanks every other.

No wonder, then, that it has been a bone of contention from time immemorial, that Turkomans, Uzbeks, Persians, have repeatedly occupied the lovely and fertile valley, only to be as often ejected by more powerful aspirants to its possession. Our own Government, under Lord Palmerston, considered its occupation by Afghanistan of such overwhelming importance as to justify a war with Persia, then, not for the first time, acting as the cat's-paw of Russia.

We have been led to advert to this subject, partly on account of its extreme importance, partly, too, because a rumour, which we can hardly believe, has for some time been afloat, that our Government do not contemplate supporting the Ameer in the possession of Herat, as, having guaranteed the integrity of his dominions, we are, by every consideration of honour, bound to do.

Of honour! yes, and of expediency. We pointed out some weeks since how Persia has been thrown by us, so to speak, into the arms of Russia. And an extract, published in another column, from a too much neglected book of Baker Pasha, will show what would be thought in that country were we to abandon to a hostile Power a city regarded throughout Asia—rightly or wrongly—with an almost superstitious veneration. "The man who has Herat has everything" is the summing up of the universal opinion of the East. Any reader of the last few numbers of the Voice of India, which fairly enough summarises the opinions of the Indian journals, will easily satisfy himself on this point.

"L'audace, encore l'audace, et toujours l'audace," said Napoleon. Firmness, again firmness, and yet again firmness, is the one thing wanting to encounter Russian pretensions, to prick the bladder, and make the bombast and bluster of a rotten and bankrupt empire collapse. Firmness has been wanting this five years past. May we see a little of it in the present Government!

THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD.

"Never prophesy except you know" is a trite enough aphorism; but there are times when it is safe to prophesy from what we know. As a peculiar instance of the fulfilment of such a prophesy, from known facts, we offer the following extract from "Clouds in the East," a work published ten years ago, and written by the then Colonel Valentine Baker, of the 10th Hussars, as the narrative of a journey on leave, in the autumn of 1873, along the north-eastern frontier of Persia. It is, indeed, curious how every warning of Colonel Baker's host has come exactly true. Each development of Russian aggression has been followed by the consequences he pointed out as inevitable nearly twelve years ago. With this word of introduction, we submit the two conversations to our readers. They purport to be conversations held by Colonel Baker with Alayar Khan, the Persian Governor of Mohamedabad, near Askabad. A message from England, forwarded through the Legation at Teheran, compelled Colonel Baker to turn back and make the best of his way home. It will not be forgotten that, in the same way, a disgraceful subservience to the Russians caused the recall from Khiva of the late Colonel Burnaby when engaged in unmasking the "civilising" progress of Russia.

"We hear," observed he (Alayar), "that England is no longer the power she used to be: that you have got great riches and think of nothing else; but that you never fight now."

"If we do not fight," I explained, "it is not from any loss of power; but we have sufficient territory, and, instead of trying to conquer more, we are endeavouring, by means of railways, roads, and general improvements, to make the most of the great empire reigned over by Her Majesty."

"But if you are so strong," he rejoined, "and if you can still fight, why did you the other day pay tribute to America?"

To explain the Alabama indemnity to a fighting Khoord chief, through Shaab (Colonel Baker's Persian attendant) as interpreter, was no easy matter. Still, I did my best, and ended by saying that we lived on an island, and were so strong at sea, that we had nothing to fear from anyone.

"But India is not an island," he remarked. "Do you intend to give that up to the Russians without fighting? Perhaps the Russians will not take tribute."

"The Russians are a long way off," I interposed; "and as you know there are great steppes between, difficult to march over."

"Yes," was the reply; "ten years ago the Russians were a long way off this place, but where are they now? They are at Samarkand, they have taken Khokand, and Bokhara is really theirs whenever they like to take it. Then we heard that England had told them they must not take Khiva; but they took it. Now they are on the Oxus. They have been to Kizil Arvat, at the foot of these very mountains, and burnt it. Soon they will come to Merv; and two or three years after that they will be at Herat. Do you think all the people you have conquered in Hindostan will be as quiet as they are now when Russia is at Herat? And how can you prevent her?" he asked. "Your fleet cannot come to Herat. Of what use will it be to you when you have to fight with Russia for India?"

I told him of the immense population of the British Empire, and of our great wealth, which would have its effect if a struggle ever came.

"But you have no army," he urged; "at least so we hear. It is said that where you have one man Russia has six. How can one man stand against six? And if you really have great riches and plenty of men, why have you no army?"

I found we were getting on to difficult ground, and endeavoured to use the views of the extreme school of optimists; but although these may pacify John Bull, the Khoord chieftain knew too much of the East to be misled by cloudy phrases, and I had to divert the conversation to other topics.

On the next day the Persian Governor reverted to the old topic once more.

"It is of no use talking of Persia, Afghanistan, and Bokhara," he proceeded; "there are only two real Powers in Asia—England and Russia; and in the course of time all the others will become vassals of one or the other. You talk to me of Afghanistan as an independent State. You will never get the people of Central Asia to believe it. We know full well that Shere Ali must be more or less the vassal of England or of Russia. Do you suppose we are so ignorant of the value of Herat? Whatever you may say or think, there is not a bazaar in Hindustan that would not believe your rule had departed if that city fell into Russian hands. You have told me of all your great wealth, that you have a population nearly three times as great as that of Russia, but most of these people must be in Hindustan; and suppose they turned against you, as undoubtedly they would do if Russia were at Herat? No, I believe in your riches, but not in your men. You acknowledge that Russia has a much larger army. Whilst she is far away from you that does not matter; but she is coming nearer and nearer—so fast, indeed, that it will soon be a question of life and death in India. Your safety consists in keeping her a long way off. Instead of that, however, you are letting her advance at a prodigious rate, and in a few years you will pay the penalty; but it will then be too late. See how far she has advanced in the last ten years. Ten years more will bring her to your frontier, and do you believe that your people will remain quiet in Hindustan when she is there? No! you will have constant intrigues and constant wars! I believe you govern very well—everyone says so, much better than the Russians—and you try to do real good to the people you have conquered. But you have conquered them, and they will wish for change. They may repent of it afterwards, but that will not prevent them turning against you at the time."

I spoke of Afghanistan as a barrier that might prevent any near approach.

He laughed at the idea. "Do you believe that the Afghans could stand for one moment against the Russians?" he asked. "Why ten thousand Russians could march from Kizil Arvat to Candahar. No; we have no chance against them now. Things have changed. We cannot stand against your new guns, and we have no training. English troops might stop the Russians, but not Afghans. Besides," he continued, "do you suppose all the Afghans would be with you? They will do anything for money. You would pay them, and so would Russia. One-half, therefore, would be for you, and one-half for her; but that is not of much importance. They could not stand against either the one or the other. But"—he was emphatic here—"how do you expect to prevent Russia from taking Herat when once she is at Merv? Are you going to send English troops to Herat?"

"There is no present idea of anything of the kind," I said, "and Russia is not yet at Merv."

"But she will be, and that soon," he urged, "if you do not prevent her. You talk of an Afghan frontier; but where is that frontier? Sometimes it is here, sometimes it is there; it depends upon the rulers at Herat or Cabul. The Moorghab river runs from Afghanistan to Merv. You know well that in this country, where there is water, troops can move. The banks of the Moorghab are fertile. How near to Herat, along this river, do you intend Russia to advance and settle?"

Utterly nonplussed, I took refuge in Mr. Grant Duff's theory that it would be a long time before all this happened.

"Yes," he replied, "but it will happen, and you will have to fight when it is too late; whereas if you were to act now it would never happen."

I am afraid I did not come well out of the controversy; he met theories with facts.

For a commentary on the above we can only refer our readers to established facts; above all, to the fact that Russian troops in force stand within ten days' easy march of Herat. The hand-writing on the wall was plain enough ten years ago, yet we would not see it!

CALCUTTA has a small-pox epidemic, the deaths during May having exceeded those during any similar period in the last ten years.

WE have received the half-yearly issue for July of the "India Army and Civil Service List," published by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., which is distinguished by its usual accuracy, and is invaluable, for purposes of references, to every one—is not their name legion?—who is personally, or by proxy in the shape of relations, connected with the Indian Services.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

 TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is especially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

The Offices of the "Broad Arrow" are removed from 2, Waterloo Place, to

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 11, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

Our advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, July 21st; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, July 19th.

NOTHING of a definite character regarding the Afghan frontier question has, according to the Calcutta Correspondent of the Times, occurred during the last few days. Va sans dire that the Russians are strengthening—probably rendering impregnable—the splendid strategical position which they were allowed, despite the “solemn covenant,” to occupy at Penjdeh and Ak Tepe.

A STRAW, probably thrown up to see which way the wind blows, and assuredly not thrown up for the first time, is the sudden discovery, alleged to have been made, in the teeth of all historical experience, that Herat may just as well be given up to Russia, if we are, en revanche, permitted—permitted, forsooth!—to occupy Candahar.

THAT is to say, that Russia may at leisure mass at Herat an army of 150,000 men, entirely supported—as we showed in a recent article—both as to provisions and ammunition, by the produce of the Herat valley, mask Candahar, if held by us, with some 50,000 men, and march the remaining 100,000, plus Turkoman cavalry innumerable, and Afghans ditto, on to the plains of India, previously encountering fortresses which they, confident in their numbers, might turn—the passes are simply countless—or practically ignore.

Is this what our Government are prepared to face? We have some confidence in a Government which seems to have put its foot down, and to have resolved that England shall not be flouted. But the persistent repetition of the rumour, that we do not insist in holding Herat “in person or by proxy,” looks very ugly.

THE St. James's Gazette opportunely reminds us of an utterance of Lord Napier of Magdala, written in 1880, which it is well worth while to recall at the present moment. The late Government burked it, probably because it is the strongest condemnation which could be passed on their do-nothing “policy” :—

If the Russians in Central Asia are a reality; if they have possessed themselves of Bokhara, Samarcand, and Tashkend; if they are about to occupy Merv, of which they make no secret; if they have an easy road to Herat, which is a fact well known, and a fortress there before them, in a fertile country held by a people without unity and without leaders, who that regards Russian progress can doubt that, if we are timid, apathetic, or consenting, a few years will see them in possession of a fortress which, in their hands, will be rendered impregnable, and will command the road to India with a facility for aggression which may be measured by Ayooob Khan's rapid march to Candahar.

WE do not, however, suppose that a Cabinet composed of gentlemen will utterly damn our reputation throughout the East for fair dealing—if, indeed, we have any left, Dinkur Rao long since said that the word good-faith had no place in the English vocabulary—by abandoning the Ameer's claim to a place which—putting wholly aside its importance to ourselves—we have solemnly guaranteed to him.

WHY have we no efficient representative, no matter under what official title—call him Shaitan if you will, only have one—in Balkh? Can we suppose that the Russians do not know every brick of every house in Balkh, and every rock in the Bamian passes? How can we watch, or counteract, their intrigues, at a distance of some hundreds of miles? But John Bull likes his beer, and beer is a rather soporific beverage.

AND why not open our eyes, if it be not too late, to the fact that the Turcomans might, in case of need, make themselves exceedingly unpleasant neighbours to the Russians? India, as we have already said, swarms with Russian intrigues. Cannot we do a tu quoque? Hitherto the allegiance of the tribes has had but one suitor, the Russians. Why not (acting on the one true principle of dealing with an Oriental as you would with a woman) offer them another? They might not object. As Ovid says :—

Quæ dant, quæque negant, gaudent tamen esse rogatæ.

Those who give, and those who don't,
Like the chance of saying, “I won't.”

Give the tribes the chance; put things in train for raising them in the Russian rear if needful.

X THOUGH the probability of cholera reaching England this year be remote, the subjoined remedy, which is so simple that it is the more likely to be efficacious, and which we do not remember to have seen before, may be useful to those who live in places likely to be visited by the plague. “Mem Sahib” writes to the Englishman :—

One of your correspondents spoke of dilute sulphuric acid being a cure for cholera. The remedy is simple enough, but unfortunately not always at hand when wanted; so, for the benefit of those who have to send a distance for it, I name a remedy which may be found in nearly every household in India. Though simple, it is not sweet and nice, being the juice of raw onions. The dose is half a wine glass every two or three hours, according to the severity of the case. I have treated several cases within the last month or two, and have been very successful in curing them; the mustard plaister, &c., has never been needed. The easiest way to obtain the juice is to rub down a few onions, and strain them through a piece of muslin. This any servant can do. X

WE rejoice that the new Government have resolved, not a moment too soon, to recognise the necessity of giving our Indian troops the Martini-Henry instead of the all but obsolete Snider.

The latter is no kind of a match for the Berdan, with which efficient weapon the Russian troops are armed. Under a Government which is not composed of manufacturers and jobbers, we had hoped that our soldiers may have cartridges which can be fired without jamming, swords which will cut, and bayonets which will penetrate. And we give no small credit to the Army and Navy Gazette for its help in obtaining the boon.

THE same paper calls attention to a danger which has been too much overlooked. The Staff Corps is a pleasant nest enough; once in it, a man usually can, if he be fairly able, and fairly fortunate, feather it comfortably enough. But it has, on the whole, been a costly failure; and to recruit it at the expense of the efficiency of the regiments on which, in the last resort, our hold of India depends, would be one more costly still. Men lose their esprit de corps, in fact cease, except in name, to belong to their regiment at all, when once transferred to this notable outcome of administrative incapacity. We gladly give our contemporary's remarks in his own words, hoping the Government may read, mark, and inwardly digest :—

We have frequent complaints of the extent to which regiments are depleted of their subaltern officers in India, owing to their transfer to the Staff Corps. Some regiments, indeed, from the above cause and other incidental circumstances, are reduced to half-a-dozen doing-duty subaltern officers. Now, we cannot help considering this a most undesirable state of things, and one for which no really valid reason can possibly be assigned. Nor can it be urged that, though the British regiments are thus reduced, we have completed the deficiencies in our Native corps. Unfortunately such is not the case, for many of them are still short of junior officers, especially the infantry. It being clearly understood that British corps have to furnish the whole of the officers for the Indian Army, it is a mistake to allow the present system to continue, as it is prejudicial to both European and Native corps, and, in time of a war lasting for any lengthened period, the evils of the system would be most difficult to remedy. Here, again, it is a mere matter of expense. There is no difficulty in obtaining the requisite number of officers. A petty saving is effected, and the detriment to the Service is overlooked. When will the authorities awake to the fact that Indian military inefficiency cannot be allowed with safety to drag on in the good old style of pre-Russian proximity days?

WE are sorry for the individuals who may have been anxious to get home, but we don't think that anyone will dispute the wisdom of the resolution to continue the restrictions on leave, at least partially. The Simla correspondent of the Englishman, speaking apparently with official knowledge, says, under date July 2:—

Reports which appear to be current in various quarters that the restrictions under which military leave is now available have been or are about to be removed are without foundation. It should be known once for all that there is no intention of removing these restrictions until the negotiations with Russia have yielded some definite result from which reasonable probability can be gathered of a peaceful solution of the present difficulties.

THE same correspondent informs us that—

Mr. Blanford's theory regarding the effect on the Monsoon of the heavy and late fall of snow on the inner Himalayas appears so far, to be borne out by the course of the present rains. Currents of north-westerly wind, which this snowfall is supposed to affect, still continue in Northern India, and have caused the usual Monsoon rain in that quarter to be a good deal below the average. The only other part of India, where the Monsoon up to date is defective, is Behar.

OUR old and excellent friend, the Planters' Gazette, has come out in a new face, or, rather, a new cover; and is, like Bottom, "translated." During the three-and-a-quarter years of its existence it has been a mine of wealth for all who wished to be informed on planting matters, and we wish it all success in its new garb.

WE are glad to see in this paper the score of a cricket match played, of all places in the world, at Yokohama. As one side beat the other by 341 to 41, it is clear that they were not "match"-ed. Such is the imitative faculty of the Japanese, that we should be by no means surprised to see in a few seasons the announcement of a match, Japan v. England. We only hope the Japanese will not have unearthed a demon bowler!

EVERY day seems to bring confirmation of our forebodings as to Persia's attitude since we have thrown her into the arms of any Power rather than ourselves. The ostentatious use made by Russia of Persian territory, as though it were her own, for military movements, surprised no one who was behind the scenes; but appalled those who, looking at the map, could judge what must be its consequences. And here is a little straw, which shows the value of our diplomacy, and the weight it carries, in Persia. Fancy having to knuckle under to France, of all Powers, in Persia, of all countries, in the world! Is it impossible either to clothe our present Envoy with the divinity that ought to hedge the Representative of a Sovereign, or to find a substitute who will clothe himself with it?

A semi-official journal, Echo de Perse, recently made its appearance in Teheran, written in French. The English Minister is said to have endeavoured to prevent its publication, or to have it published in English. The French Minister warmly supported the innocent journal, and his Majesty the Shah paid no attention to the objects of the representative of England. Another Bosphore Egyptien in Persia!

"The Russians," says the Sangbad Provakar, as quoted by the Englishman, are now at the gate of India:—

A question has arisen among Englishmen as to where the key of India is, and where Russian aggression may be checked. The key of India is in no other place than in India. If the Government dispense even-handed justice, introduce a better system of administration, and adhere to the proclamation of Her Majesty, then if thousands of Russians advance they will not be able to occupy a bit of land in India. If two hundred millions of Indian subjects be attached to the Government, then, if ten lakhs of Russian troops advance, they will not be successful. The key of India is in the hands of its people, who have shown from the very beginning that they will not make it over to Russia so long as there is life in them. The Government, therefore, ought to satisfy the just claims of those loyal subjects.

THE Times correspondent, telegraphing from Meshed, informs us that the Russians have caused much excitement at Merv, "apparently on account of outrages committed on the women." Can anyone forget Stepniak's narrative of the outraging of a girl (who was probably accused of Nihilism for this very purpose) in the Troubetzkoi ravelin? And her being poisoned, lest she should divulge the treatment to which she had been subjected? Can anyone, who has ever read it, forget the story of the ladies of noble birth who, being sent as political offenders to Siberia, had to disfigure themselves, by lacerating their own faces, in order not to expose themselves to the filthy "attentions" of the verminy Cossack escort? Never mind; Russia is "Holy." And we shall have her exceptional "holiness" proclaimed, and all these abominations defended, ere long, in an electoral campaign. All the same, we are pleased that she should have outraged the tenderest feelings of the Turkomans. A competent man, even at Teheran, might find grist for his mill in such a matter. How the Meshed Consul has allowed himself to be flouted we all know. To speak plainly, the ordinary masher is worse than useless. It is strong men who are wanted in Persia, men who can grasp an opportunity. No one is more fitful in his humours than the average oriental ruler, be he Sultan, Shah, Nawab, or Rujah. There used to be a song, of which one line ran:—

"Take me while I'm in the humour;
And that's just now."

This is exactly what our representatives in the East ought to do. They should be "all things to all men, instant in season and out of season."

THE correspondent of the Pioneer with the Boundary Commission mentions some curious contrivances to relieve life in Meshed of some of its irksomeness: "Taking a bird's-eye view of the city one sees nothing but mud walls and trees, with perhaps a tall badgir or wind tower standing out conspicuously here and there. These badgirs are a great godsend in the summer. Some days ago I was taking a look at a handsome mansion (in the garden opposite the telegraph office) which was being prepared for the reception of the Commander-in-Chief here. I found that the wind from the badgirs was carried down into cellars below the ground-floor and then disseminated through the house by gratings in the floor of each room and passage. The advantage of this arrangement is that the air which, when it enters the badgir, is, in summer, warm, becomes cooled in its passage through the cellars, and is distributed cool through the house. One of the most admirable arrangements in a Persian house is the central tank. This is generally situated in a lofty dark chamber, and is often five or six feet below the level of the surrounding rooms. Its floor is of cool stone, or in the houses of the wealthy and noble of white marble. Around this in the hot weather the sybaritic Persian sits (when he does not feel disposed for the society of the inmates of his andarun, Anglice harem), drinks wine, arrack, or sherbet, tea or coffee, as the spirit moveth him, and smokes the ever-circling kalian. Fie, oh Persian! How canst thou drink "the red wine sparkling in the cup," arrack, &c.?

WE thoroughly concur in these remarks, which we quote from a Service contemporary:—

The Government of India is about to propose a measure for the abolition of imprisonment for debt. Such a change would be of enormous importance to India, where great portions of the population are held in thralldom by the money-lenders. It is for us, however, only to examine the question in its bearings as regards members of the Service. In this respect no one conversant with India can doubt that the benefit to officers by such a change of law would be immense. One of the curses of India is the facility with which young officers can borrow money. Their temptations to extravagance upon first arriving in the country are large. There is a bungalow to be furnished, horses to be bought, a share to be taken in the amusements and festivities of the station; for all this money is required, and the new comer finds that, so far from there being any difficulty in obtaining it, it is absolutely pressed upon him. The interest, of course, is heavy, but he flatters himself that when the initial expenses have been met he will have no difficulty in paying the interest regularly, and the sum borrowed in course of time, out of his pay. He soon finds out his mistake. Then come fresh loans, until at last he becomes hopelessly enmeshed in the grasp of the money-lenders. The lives of thousands of young officers in India have been embittered and ruined by the first fatal facility of borrowing money. Hundreds have been forced to sell out of the Service and retire. With the abolition of imprisonment for debt all this would come to an end. The threat of imprisonment is the one security upon which the money-lender relies; deprive him of this, and he will no longer press his loans upon newly-arrived officers, and the latter will no longer be tempted into habits of extravagance which sooner or later must entail ruin or disgrace.

WE are very sorry to see that the Government are inclined, when they take over the Sind-Punjab-Delhi line, to send "to the right-about" many of its most experienced officers, merely, as it would seem, because these are the most highly paid. We think this a capital mistake. If there be any line in India in which the efficiency derived from experience is a sine qua non, it is the line which runs, in a degree, parallel with the West and North-West frontier, and which connects its most important Cis-Indus posts. The saving to be effected may represent a few annual thousands, the loss of efficiency may entail the loss, in a couple of weeks, of twice as many lakhs. Was anything ever so unpractical? Is it too late to reconsider the matter?

BOMBAY is a fine city, few are finer; but would it not add to the comfort of the populace were footpaths placed in the streets? Owing to their absence the task of progressing in safety and comfort is difficult alike to pedestrian and equestrian.

It is perhaps not generally known that pumice stone is the product of a volcano. Quite recently the sea-beach of Colombo, in Ceylon, was strewn with this article of commerce consequent upon the activity of the Malayan "fire mountains."

THIS is how servants manage matters in India. Nubli Buksh cannot think of standing in the way of his "bhai," so as junior he goes. Ali Buksh pleads, that as senior he could not remain when his younger companion had resigned—so he goes. The cook, being engaged by Nubli Buksh, cannot stop in a service which his patron had quitted—so he goes. The dishwasher must follow, as a matter of etiquette, the fortunes of his master the cook—so he goes. Thus the house is cleared out because one servant quarrels with his master. Mysterious, indeed, are the ways of servanthood, in all climes and in all places!

WHERE is the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals? Have they agents in India? If so, might it not be worth while considering whether riding a horse to death is not an offence which is punishable under the Penal Code? If not, it ought to be.

INDIA has been described by a masher as a "dooced good place to wear one's old clothes out in, don't you know." Perhaps the satirist had in his mind's-eye (if he had a mind at all) the shocking bad hats which of late have graced the capital of the Paishwas.

To see two hundred "dandies" crowded into a place large enough to hold twenty, must have been a sight for the gods. Forsooth, Masuri is an honoured city!

COLERIDGE spoke, long ago, of "that barbarous vocable, talented," saying we might as well use skillinged and tenpenced. What would he say to the introduction into the language of new (and more than barbarous) words, as a proof of loyalty? Says an Indian contemporary:—"The spontaneous outburst of loyalty in the Native press will have one good effect—in enlarging the English language. For satisfactory abuse of Russia a Delhi paper finds existing epithets all too few, and addresses the Moscowites as, among other things, 'fallow-brains,' 'gabies,' 'job bernowls,' 'pumps,' 'squatters,' 'ualators,' 'wreakers,' 'yellers,' and 'zokels.' 'Jobbernowls' is a good word." We thought that with—the English language had (as we have been so often told that the Russian Empire has) "reached its utmost legitimate limits of expansion." We are so sorry we were wrong. Lewis Carroll must look to his laurels. And, horrid thought! five years hence we must re-inaugurate spelling-bees, and have a new edition of Nuttall, to fix the spelling of all the new words! We think (subject to correction) that "Jobbernowls" is rightly spelt. Fortunately the orthography of the immortal Jabberwocks and Jubjubs has been for ever settled.

"O frabjous day! Culloo, Cullay!
He chortled in his joy!"

JUST fancy a British officer, in these days of examinations for every conceivable thing, being so crassly ignorant as to inquire whether any officer of the Indian contingent spoke English! One is tempted to ask, with the Americans, "Where was he raised?" "It reminds us," says an Indian paper, "of a little episode in the life of a lady, the wife of a gallant general, who, on being told by her husband's aide-de camp that he had been over to the — Mess to see the English papers, remarked, 'What, do Native messes take in English papers?' This was the last straw; the aide-de-camp resigned."

WE were speaking the other day of the different double meanings, in different languages, of the same word. Goodness knows that in English they are odd enough. Frenchman speaks:—"I am going to leave my hotel. I paid my bill yesterday, and I said to the landlord: 'Do I owe anything else?' He said: 'You are square.' 'What am I?' He said, again: 'You are square.' 'That's strange,' said I. 'I lived so long I never knew I was square before.' Then, as I was going away, he shook me by the hand, saying: 'I hope you'll be round soon.' I said: 'I thought you said I was square. Now you hope I'll be round soon.' He laughed and said: 'When I tell you you'll be round, I mean you won't be long.' I did not know how many forms he wished me to assume; however, I was glad he did not call me flat."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

SUAKIN, 1885. A SKETCH OF THE CAMPAIGN OF THIS YEAR.*

The author of this extremely interesting volume frankly avows that it was written on a sick-bed; and, in ordinary circumstances, (as, for instance, in the case of a mere book of travels), we might have been inclined to suppose that the writer's illness had, to some extent, given an unduly sombre colouring to his book, which, however, we are bound to say, seems (as it professes) to be a mere statement of actual facts. Viewed in this light, and accepting the accuracy of "the officer's" assertions, we can hardly imagine revelations more damatory to those concerned in the administration of the Army, and the management of the Suakin Expedition, nor any more ominous, or more replete with warnings to the powers that be, as to the chances of our troops if opposed to an European foe.

From the first few pages, almost to the end of the volume, we find nothing but "damnable iteration" of mismanagement.

Clear it is that, the Soudan Expedition having once been undertaken, and its object once announced to the world—especially to the Asiatic world, that object, the relief of Gordon, if alive, and the obtaining possession of Khartoum in any case should have been carried out coite que coite. It was emphatically a case in which Ovid's well-known line, written with reference to a very different kind of enterprise,

"Aut non tentaris, aut perforce."

But though, owing to carelessness, or to utter ignorance of what prestige means, the late Government inconceivably damaged our reputation throughout the East by their doings in Egypt, it is not our present object to enter on political questions. We are rather concerned to point out the many respects in which the organization of our European forces has wholly failed to stand the test of active service in a hot climate; reminding our readers that all our deficiencies have assuredly been, long since, recorded by the Staff of every War Office in Europe, and vastly exaggerated in every Durbar in Asia.

Our space limits us to few quotations, but, unfortunately, "a little goes a long way" in this case.

To begin with, we were habitually out-generalled by the Arabs. No one who has read the daily journals with anything like attention can doubt this; but, should he want proof of the fact, let him carefully read Chapter 7 of this book, with especial advertence to pp. 158-160, which, though we do not profess to undertake to criticise military operations, we should think worth the perusal of any reader.

But one thing does deserve the attention of every Englishman. It is the scandalous way in which our soldiers are armed. Every newspaper has had letters on this subject, and it has been more than hinted that, if the habitual jamming of the cartridges were inevitable, the uselessness of the bayonets and the swords might not have been a standing reproach to the War Office, had not several members of the late Ministry been representatives of the centres of the iron trade.

Without in any way necessarily endorsing such imputations, we think it but right to lay before our readers the fearful results which this neglect of the safety of our men has brought about. To send a man into action, and to withhold from him the best weapons you can possibly procure, is thinly-disguised murder. And a nation which pays so many millions yearly for its Army and Navy would most certainly not grudge the not very considerable sum, which would represent the difference between the sending a perfectly, and an indifferently, equipped army into the field.

The subject is so important, that we make no apology for quoting our author's remarks on it in his own words. Be it remembered that, as an instructor of musketry, he speaks with something more than average knowledge:—

"First in importance is the clogging of the Martini-Henry rifles. Years ago every instructor of musketry was asked to send in a report on the way they worked. The common fault found with them was, that a rifle was often rendered momentarily useless on account of inability to extract the cartridge-case after firing. . . . With regard to the cartridge itself, fault was found with its construction, but we were informed that the cartridge was only experimental, and would be replaced by a better one later on. . . . The clumsy built-up and bottle-shaped cartridge has been in use ever since, and no other has ever been supplied. More than this, a price is given per thousand for the empty cases returned into store, which are refilled, and the error continued ad infinitum. This cartridge," the author adds, "has lost us many valuable lives, and the ammunition is, moreover, of various sizes—not to say that the soldiers were to cut up the bullets of their cartridges into four pieces while awaiting a supply of slugs or buckshot from England!" In fact, no blunder was left out which it was possible to make.

Nor are things better as regards the bayonet. "Why are our soldiers," exclaims the author, in righteous indignation, "armed with a weapon which, when put to the test, simply doubles up like so much soft metal? . . . All bayonets and swords should be called in, and a fresh issue made of weapons each of which has been put through a severe test. Surely it is time some notice was taken of a crying evil which may land us in a terrible plight when we become engaged in a European war." Time, indeed!

The provisions seem to have been no better than the arms. "The disease most prevalent was dysentery. I put this down almost entirely to the want of fresh meat, which might so easily have been sent out from Suakin. The salt (tinned) beef was principally the cause of it; and why the army was ever supplied with such uneatable stuff is wonderful, indeed. I knew many cases where men actually threw their rations away, rather than run the risk of increasing their thirst by putting such stuff in their mouths . . . and turned from it with loathing and disgust." The author was told, by an eminent medical man, "that the force in the zaribas was bordering on scurvy; that dysentery might have been almost entirely avoided had fresh meat been sent out twice a week." And this while "fresh meat," in the shape of cattle without number, was "eating its head off" some six miles away (p. 221). Nor does the water seem to have been even drinkable. An amusing story is told (p. 218) of an officer who did not think it even fit to wash in, and bought a bottle of soda-water at the fabulous price of ten shillings to perform his ablutions. An officer, whose letter will be seen in last Saturday week's Standard, characterizes the distilled water, which might have been supposed to be pure, as simply putrid.

The author's tribute of praise to the medical staff (p. 155) is, we are sure, well deserved, and his appreciation of the value of war correspondents (p. 115) has much pleased us.

We are glad, too, to see the high estimate he has formed of the Indian troops. The account he gives of their equipment (in some respects, as regards cavalry, superior to that of the Europeans), and of their behaviour in action (which is too well known to need praise), is pleasant reading.

The well-known fight at the zariba, the scandalous want of the most ordinary military precautions, which led to a massacre of the beasts of burden, and well-nigh entailed the annihilation of the entire force, and the sickening scene after the slaughter, are graphically described (p. 200). It would seem to have been a species of amusement for the commanders of our troops to take out the men (always losing a good many on the way) to build up zaribas, and then to destroy them.

A good deal is said about the navvies, and the author's remarks on the subject seem pertinent and just.

We assuredly do not see why, when the Duke of Sutherland offered to make the Suakin-Berber Railway himself on a guarantee of 4 per cent. from the Egyptian Government, a contract for it was ever put out at all. But, once undertaken, it is surely clear that it should have been carried out by the navvies of the contracting firm, and not by the soldiery. Yet more than once we read, that the soldiers did a very large share of the work. Fancy (p. 101) a navy receiving twelve shillings a day, about double a lieutenant's pay! Not to say that (p. 102) the best work was done by Indian coolies on probably a few annas a day. As too usually is the case with labourers of all kinds in England, there was no "heart" in the work of these navvies; "none of that cheery self-sacrifice and readiness to work, of which we saw so many instances among our own men," says the author.

We have dwelt longer on this book than is our wont, because we think the disclosures and exposures of mismanagement, both at home and on the spot, deserve public attention, the whole expedition having apparently been designed on the principle of lavish expenditure in pounds, and ruinous economy in pence.

We thank the author for his book, but he need not have written anonymously. No man, least of all an officer, need be otherwise than proud of bringing to light one of the longest and most costly series of blunders on record.

AMBUSHES AND SURPRISES.*

The title of this work exactly denotes its character. It is, so far as we can see, an accurate, and, indeed, a picturesque, record of some of the most remarkable instances of what are, perhaps, among the most exciting events in history. The Abbé de Saint Réal, in that admirable introduction to the "Conjuration des Espagnoles contre Venise," which, like the work itself, is at once one of the glories of French literature, and a despair to translators, says, that no enterprises of mankind are so noteworthy as conspiracies. We are inclined, to a certain point, to agree with the worthy Abbé. Nothing is so certain as the unforeseen, even if be but in the development of a conspiracy. But for sensational episodes, commend us to "Ambushes and Surprises."

Colonel Malleon bids us revel in these. He has selected instances ranging from the time of Hannibal to that of the Indian Mutiny.

Space forbids us to follow our indefatigable author through the lifelike delineation of the various incidents detailed in his work. Our concern is, of course, primarily with matters affecting India; but we think that perhaps one of the best essays in the book, and one which most shows the intuitive insight of a competent military man, is that on the operations before and after the defeat of the Roman General Varus, in the year A.D. 9, by the united German tribes under Arminius. (The death of Hermann—Arminius—is erroneously given at p. 95 as 29 B.C. instead of A.D.) For this essay the materials are so incomplete, and in some points so contradictory, that the success of the author in giving a vivid picture of the entire series of operations is the more to be commended.

Leaving the excellent account of the Roman disaster at Trasimene, which Colonel Malleon has—as, in order of date he was bound to do, placed first in the book—the interesting, though, perhaps, somewhat mythic, tale of Roland at Roncevalles, and the story, so well known, of the "surprise" at Inkerman, we must turn our faces further eastward. Let us remark, on our way, through the longest and somewhat "spun out" essay (Kerkoporta) in the book, that Myriandri (p. 207) would not signify 1,000, but 10,000, men. And that in the same essay (p. 210) we are given "Meshed" instead of "Meshach," as the name of the second of the three Hebrews whom Nebuchadnezzar cast into the "burning fiery furnace." The story of Kerkoporta is simply that of a postern gate carelessly left open during the final assault of the Turks on Constantinople in 1453; and, not being the result of any strategic movement, but simply that of an accident which might at any time occur, scarcely comes under the head of surprises designedly arranged to ensure the speedier discomfiture of the foe.

We next arrive before Arrah in the height of the Mutiny in 1857. Tayler, "Patna Tayler," had, for the moment, prevented all effective action on the part of the Wahabees, the Puritans of Islam, and the most inveterate enemies of the British Raj, by the simple measure of imprisoning their leaders. General Lloyd had, from unwillingness to accept the responsibility of disarming the three Native Regiments at Dinapore in the absence of positive orders (which, says Colonel Malleon, the Government of India were too lacking in prescience and firmness to venture on issuing), paltered with the emergency, and, after a scarcely half-hearted attempt at pursuit, had allowed their escape in the direction of Arrah (or, as folk now call it, A'rah), twenty-five miles distant. To relieve the fifteen Europeans about to be besieged there in a half-fortified house, was obviously a primary duty. Lloyd, bewildered by the imminence of the danger at Patna, wanted (p. 391) to give up the enterprise because the steamer conveying the relieving troops grounded; but was dissuaded by Taylor, who seems never to have lost his head in this crisis. The officer in command, Dunbar, appears to have marched on without a semblance of precaution, even when presenting his flank to a mango-grove whence mischief might have been looked for. Suddenly assailed by a deadly fire on the flank and in front, after losing many officers, including their commander, Dunbar, and men, and taking refuge till daylight in an empty tank, the force commenced its retreat; which soon, as might have been expected from troops pounded all night by an invisible foe, degenerated into a stampede. They were saved from utter destruction by lack of ammunition on the part of the enemy, and the scene at the place of embarkation was simply disgraceful (p. 393). (The subsequent relief of Arrah, with even fewer troops, by Sir Vincent Eyre, partaking, as it did, neither of the nature of an ambush, nor of that of a surprise, as glorious as the preceding failure was the reverse, does not come within the scope of Colonel Malleon's present work.)

It is a relief to turn from this deplorable scene, so discreditable to our arms, to the successful march made by Lord Mark Kerr, in circumstances of very exceptional difficulty, from Benares to the relief of Azingurh, which, says Colonel Malleon, "stands out as the only instance in history in which an army, surprised by an enemy lying in ambush for it, succeeded in defeating the surprisers" (p. 403). Lord Mark Kerr, to whom the work is dedicated—deserves, and obtained, the very highest credit for his admirable management both before and after the conflict. But it seems to us that his "fine powers of observation" were exerted to the best advantage, and just foiled the enemy's attempt to effect a complete "surprise," which might have been fatal to the force, as it assuredly would have been if by an unsuspected attack, like that of the Arals the other day, they had got in any force among the carts and bullocks of the baggage train. Was it not Lord Mark's highest desert that he "spotted" and averted the enemy's assault in force by delivering one himself? It is, however, with diffidence that we express any opinion on a matter of this nature.

Among the most interesting chapters to the professed military man will probably be those narrating the operations in Germany and Switzerland (chaps. 5, 7 and 8); the last, dealing with strategical movements in a country so well-known as Switzerland, would be intelligible to some, even without the aid of the very clear map contained in the chapter itself.

The whole book, to which considerations of space forbid our referring at greater length, is replete with interest, and is the work, it is needless to say, of one who is not only an enthusiast for his profession, but a profound student of, and a most accomplished writer on, all matters concerning it.

We need scarcely tell our readers with what diffidence we venture even to express approbation—for the expression of approbation implies knowledge vastly superior to that possessed by the person approved, and would, therefore, in the present case, be presumptuous on our part—of the work before us, which, indeed, seems to be a Soyer, plus a Francatelli, in excelsis. There is a story of an excitable French cook, who blew out his brains because his master had inflicted on him the indignity of putting salt into a soup which he had pronounced perfect. We think we can guarantee Mrs. Clarke's pupils, provided they carefully read the instructions given them, and—as a certain vulgar "Jack-in-Office" (of course a Radical), once said to no less distinguished a man than Sir Joseph Hooker, of Kew—"govern themselves accordingly," against any necessity of the kind. What surprises us is, not the excellence of the dishes—of which, having tried not a few of the less complicated ones, we can only speak approvingly—but the terrible number of ingredients required to arrive at a definite result. For oyster soup, fourteen; for plum-pudding (dear old dish), fifteen; for chicken fricassee and poivrade sauce, sixteen each; and, to cap all, aspic jelly, which appears as an item in four recipes, actually requires twenty-three ingredients!

Indian readers will be chiefly interested in those dishes which are never wanting on the table of an old Indian. Curry powder in England is tolerable, but where can one get the fresh mehta, the freshly-pounded herbs, which every Indian thinks the real essence of a good curry? Nevertheless, there are really good recipes, as we can aver from experience, both for clear mulligatawny (p. 19), and for "Bengal" curry (p. 62), though many would like a little more heat in each. However, Mrs. Clarke has not (as she well might have done) specified which curry powder and paste she is in the habit of using; with what powder she loads her gun.

A second edition may be improved by the correction of a few slips of the pen which have escaped notice when the proofs were examined. Œufs farcie (p. 107–111) for farcis, for instance.

We may, on the whole, congratulate the Training School for Cookery, and Mrs. Clarke, as its representative, on having produced a work, the simplicity and clearness of which will introduce, at least partially, into many a middle-class house the style of cuisine hitherto confined to those who, like the celebrated reading party, pay their cook three times what they pay their tutor.

NATIONAL REVIEW.*

This is a very interesting number. It opens with a paper entitled "Gordon or Gladstone?" which could not be other than a scathing denunciation of a Government which could send to a post of danger, with the deliberate intention of sacrificing him to Parliamentary "expediency," the country's greatest and best—because most self-sacrificing—hero. This strongly but well-written paper is alone enough to excite universal interest. Mr. Keble's "Tory Ministers" deals, on the present occasion, with the conduct of Sir R. Peel, and is closely and well argued throughout. Perhaps the article which will, to the majority of readers, convey the greatest amount of information absolutely new to them is that about the cultivation (or rather non-cultivation) of tobacco in Ireland. That a product which will yield in comparatively untried hands £100 a-year on half an acre (see p. 766) should be absolutely prohibited may well cause astonishment. The excuse was the difficulty of collecting the duty on its growth by excise on the spot rather than by customs on entering the country; a difficulty felt neither in France nor Germany, and, probably, purely imaginary.

In this, as in all other matters affecting Ireland, our legislation has been a see-saw. Permitted up to 1661, the cultivation of tobacco was then prohibited. On the revolt of the American Colonies it was again allowed. In 1832 again practically prohibited; all these changes, ruinous to the small proprietor, being (let it be noted) made, not even for the alleged benefit of the country—for the "exhausting effects" on the soil, of the growth of tobacco, are but a transparent pretext for adopting a foregone conclusion—but to suit the convenience of the English exchequer. Can we wonder if we are looked on as "aliens" in Ireland?

We owe that poor country a debt, for years of uncertain administration, a huge debt of reparation. How can anyone prosper, who knows not what disabling statute may be passed at any moment? We lay especial stress on the uncertainty, the want of finality, which has lamentably characterised our dealings with Ireland. We well remember the late Lord Lawrence saying that it was better to do the wrong thing, and stick to it, than to be perpetually hovering between one thing and the other.

If, instead of indulging in fancy notions, we had pursued a consistent policy in Ireland, even a harsh one, we much mislike if matters would not be different now. As Mr. Staples most justly remarks (p. 769), we are using against the Irish farmer "the very worst form of protection, since foreigners are protected in sending to Ireland a plant largely used there which might otherwise be produced in the country." Here is one undoubted Irish grievance which can be removed. We hope the present Government will not hesitate to remove it.

SUMMER TOURS IN SCOTLAND.†

A useful little book for tourists, containing litho-photos of some beautiful scenery on which the pleasure-seeker is enabled to feast his eyes whilst traversing the rivers and bays in this most romantic country. To glance at the contents of the book is enough to make one long for a trip in the Columba up the lakes and rivers of Scotland. The steamers are fitted up more luxuriously than many hotels. Bath-rooms, salt-water baths, shampooing and hair-cutting establishments, cloak-room, bookstall, and fruit shops are to be found. Moreover, all post-office business is transacted on board.

"A Landsman," writing to a contemporary, says:—"When the tourist is at Glasgow he finds himself in the midst of no end of attractions and inducements to go further. David MacBrayne's delightful summer tours to the Highlands by the "Royal Route," in magnificent and superbly-fitted steamers, present all the charms of variety, both as to locality and length of trip, and every year they are increasingly patronised. One of the finest steamers of the fleet—the celebrated Columba—passed us as we entered the Clyde, a veritable floating palace, accommodating two thousand passengers, and attaining a speed of twenty-two miles an hour. The Grenadier, which has just been put on the service, is an equally magnificent vessel. The departure of these, and other fine steamers, from the Broomielaw is, of itself, a sight well worth seeing. Then there are the circular tours, with the lochs and the mountains, and the Trossachs immortalised by Sir Walter Scott—all presenting irresistible charms, and almost compelling a resolve to take one route or the other."

To those who have yet to make the acquaintance of the Kyles, Loch Fyne, the Crinan Canal, and that wonderland which stretches to the north and west of Crinan, our advice is, make their acquaintance at the earliest opportunity, and during the current holiday season if possible.

INDIAN REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE, 1884-5.

IN ordinary circumstances we should think an apology due to our readers for introducing the subject of Indian Finance during the dog-days, for it is apt to be dry, consumedly dry. There can, however, be no doubt of its urgency, and Lord Randolph Churchill's singularly able speech in explanation of the Indian Budget will have awakened attention to the importance of the subject in quarters where it has never as yet elicited but a yawn.

As is well known, the usual statement contains, besides the forecast of revenue and expenditure for the current year, the actual results of the financial administration of two years ago, and the "revised estimates"—usually approximately what will be the result—of that of the preceding year; and the importance of the utmost accuracy need not be insisted on.

Taking the Revenue of India in round numbers at seventy millions, we find, two years ago, a surplus of £1,387,000; in the ensuing year, on the other hand, a deficit of more than a million, caused by a falling-off of revenue by £568,000, and an increased expenditure of £161,000, the deficiency in revenue being attributed by Lord R. Churchill to the effects of that wave of depression in trade, which would seem pretty impartially to have affected nearly every part of the world.

In the present year, wars, and rumours of wars, have seriously shaken the stability of the calculations made by the Indian Chancellor of the Exchequer; to an extent, indeed, even greater than, as it seems to us, should have been the case; for while the actual military expenditure entailed by the Russian advance is put at £2,600,000, the Budget is out by nearly £5,000,000. Now, as the Budget was submitted in March, when that advance was perfectly well known (and it may be as well to recall that in that very month Komaroff's attack on the Afghans took place), surely adequate provision should have been made for contingencies almost as probable as they have proved possible? The Budget, in fact, whispered "Peace, peace," where there was no peace. And surely some explanation is needed, why the revenue from Railways was put half-a-million too low?

These subjects, which undoubtedly demand elucidation, did not, as much as could have been wished, fix the attention of the Committee, for Lord R. Churchill delivered an acrimonious attack on the shortsighted policy of unpreparedness of Lord Ripon's Government, an attack which, however well deserved, was out of place in a Budget speech, and had the effect of instantly evoking that partisan spirit so much to be deplored when Parliament deals with Indian subjects, and of reducing the rest of the discussion to a mere bandying of personalities.

As regards the great extra outlay caused by the war, the sum, above mentioned, of some two and a-half millions has been expended in equipping two army corps; and Lord R. Churchill was well within his rights in pointing out how large a proportion (nearly one-half, said the speaker) of this great expenditure might have been saved, but for the wanton abandonment, in a fit of puerile and vindictive petulance, of the Quetta Railway, not to speak of the 'considerable loss of life, together with an amount of hardship and suffering to man and beast which it is impossible to estimate,' the necessity for which the existence of this most useful line would have wholly obviated.

The arming of the Native troops with the Martini-Henry, the rendering impregnable, so far as human ingenuity can do it, our vast frontier, and the adequate protection, by torpedoes, or otherwise, of our coasts and harbours, are matters on which few thinking men can have any difference of opinion; the general feeling will be one of great regret that they were not adopted far sooner, and of hope that they may even now be in time to serve their purpose. Yet, if ordnance to the tune of £450,000 has only now been ordered in England, it is strictly germane to the matter in hand to inquire when these, as well as the Martini-Henry rifles, are likely to be delivered.

Lord Randolph's anticipation, that, for the present, if not in all time to come, we must prepare annually to expend £2,000,000 more than at present for military charges, is not a pleasant one; but plainly to state it, and to justify it on the ground of necessity, is a course at least manly and straightforward, and which ought to show cavillers, of whom there have been not a few, that we have in Lord Randolph Churchill a man not afraid to look an undoubted danger in the face, and to tell us that he is doing so.

OBITUARY.

THE death of Viscount Halifax, better known as Sir Charles Wood, successively Chancellor of the Exchequer, First Lord of the Admiralty, and Secretary of State for India, removes from the scene of politics a typical Whig. To the readers of this journal he will best be known as having been Secretary of State for India at the time when the Indian Army was "transmogrified" and the Indian Navy abolished, the former in many respects a doubtful, and in all a costly, change, the latter an undeniable blunder. Lord Halifax possessed great industry, perseverance, and power of work. People used to call him, very unfairly however, a Whig hack; and Disraeli once spoke of him as a man who was absent from no Ministry. Nor was this by any means surprising. He was too useful to be left out, and, as has truly been remarked, was one of the "working bees" of the Whig hive. But a statesman he hardly was. He was an opportunist, too much inclined to deal with each case pro re nata. As Secretary for India such a tendency had far-reaching, and perhaps not exclusively beneficial, results. On the whole, however, his administration at the India Office was at the time considered, by most people, to have been a success. The Times thus quotes its own article of 1866, on the occasion of Sir Charles's resignation, from ill-health, of the Indian Secretaryship:—"As a monument of his ability, industry, and judgment Sir Charles Wood may fairly point to his six years' administration of India, during a period of transition and unexampled difficulty at home and abroad. He found everything in disorder, and had everything to reconstruct. He had to recast the whole judicial system of India, to create for her a paper currency, to superintend the remodelling of her taxation and the reorganisation of her finances. He had to develop a railway system; and last, and most difficult of all, to carry through the Herculean labour of amalgamating the Queen's armies. If it has been impossible to do justice to every individual, we believe that, upon the whole, the Indian army has been a gainer under the change." And that his services in effecting the reorganisation of the Indian Army were highly appreciated by Her Majesty, the following extract from Sir T. Martin's "Life of the Prince Consort," sufficiently shows. Sir C. Wood had written to say that the scheme had been approved by the Council of India and the War Office, and might now be considered ripe for the Queen's sanction. The Prince replies under date Jan. 9, 1861:—"The Queen wishes me to express to you how much she appreciates the patience, judgment, and good temper with which you have brought to its conclusion, under so many difficulties, a settlement of the Indian Army question, which is so entirely satisfactory to her and in accordance with the dignity and prerogative of the Crown, as well as conducive to the safety of the Empire." With this extract, expressing the approval of his services by the highest authority, we take leave of him whom India always knew as Sir Charles Wood. May the earth lie light on his ashes.

THE Calcutta correspondent of a contemporary thus—and very justly—alludes to the death of the Maharajah of Travancore:—"It is not too much to say, with an Indian newspaper, that this event is a loss only less grave to the Indian Empire than to the particular State which he governed. Since he ascended the throne, five years ago, the late Maharajah has been known as the most enlightened and the most learned of native Princes. He wrote and spoke English with ease, was well versed in several Indian vernacular languages, and was an accomplished Sanscrit scholar. He had travelled over a great part of India, and wherever he went he made himself thoroughly well acquainted with everything worth of notice. As a youth he had the advantage of training under Sir Madhava Rao, the ablest of modern Native statesmen, and the first man to start Travancore on that path of progress which it has followed with so much success. The Maharajah was a firm friend of the British Government, and under his rule Travancore continued to advance in prosperity, and well deserved the epithet often applied to it—the model native State of India. The succession, according to the peculiar law in force in Travancore, goes in the female line. The Sovereign is succeeded, not by his son, but by his uterine brother, if he have any, and, failing brothers, then by sister's son or sister's daughter's son.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, AUGUST 17, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, July 28th; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, July 26th.

INTELLIGENCE from Calcutta to the 16th inst. is published in the usual weekly telegram of the Times Calcutta correspondent, which appears to-day, and from which we take the following items:—

CALCUTTA, Aug. 16.

All the news which has come from Afghanistan lately seems to show, that the Ameer's visit to Rawul Pindi, and his decoration with the Star of India have had a most satisfactory effect on his mind and have greatly increased his prestige among his subjects. It is said that he speaks openly in the Durbar of the good order and contentment which he observed in India, and of the military strength displayed at Rawul Pindi. The ceremonies with which he celebrated the receipt of the Queen's Firman conferring the Star of India appears to have inspired an idea of the value of the British alliance such as never was held before.

It is reported that the Ameer's son will take command of the garrison at Herat, which will consist of 12,000 men. The defence is progressing rapidly, and, as all accounts point to the conclusion that a Russian attack would be the signal for the neighbouring tribesmen to rally round the Ameer's standard, it seems likely that General Komaroff, if bent on an attempt upon Herat, will find its capture no easy matter.

The rumour was current here for some days last week that the Russians had occupied the Zulfikar Pass in force. Had it been true it would probably have been confirmed by this time. Lord Salisbury's declaration on the subject of Zulfikar has given general satisfaction. There is no difference of opinion in India that, however great might be the advantage from a purely military point of view of awaiting the attack at Candahar, we are bound in honour to maintain the integrity of the Ameer's dominions and not to consent to surrender any point to which he attaches value.

The telegraphed summary of the Queen's Speech is so condensed as to convey little information; but it is reassuring in so far as it indicates that the Ministry have hopeful prospects of peace, and are fully alive to the necessity of putting the frontier defences on a proper footing.

Among other rumours from Central Asia, is one that the Czar has written to the Ameer of Bokhara asking leave to construct a railway through Bokhara to the Oxus. The Ameer, after consulting the counsellors and merchants, replied that, although his people had agreed to a telegraph being made through Bokhara, they objected to a railway, as likely to interfere with the profits of their trade. Thereupon the Czar again wrote pressing for a sanction to the line, and also for a grant of land for a cantonment on the banks of the Oxus. It is not beyond the bounds of possibility that Russia may be preparing to force a quarrel on Bokhara with the view of taking over the country altogether. It is, adds the correspondent, an open secret that a somewhat sweeping measure of army reform is under the Viceroy's consideration, and will shortly be laid before the Secretary of State. He mentions certain details, but under the proviso that nothing is officially known. Pending definite information, we confine ourselves to saying that they all point in the right direction, that of a considerable increase of the available force.

THE Queen's Speech on the occasion of the Prorogation of Parliament contained the following reference to India:—

I am taking the necessary steps to place the North-Western frontier of my Indian Empire in a condition of adequate defence, in the absence of which the prosperity and tranquillity of my Indian subjects are liable from time to time to be interrupted and disturbed.

LORD R. CHURCHILL had, in reply to questions, previously stated that the Afghan Boundary Commission had done, and were still doing, good and useful work, that he could not consider the dispute about Zulfikar "trivial," as suggested in the question, and that the Government "are not altogether without some confidence that before long they may be fortunate enough to arrive at a satisfactory settlement of the boundary question, which has not yet been decided upon."

THIS intimation confirms a Reuter's telegram, according to which the Russian Government have made proposals "to which the assent of the British Government appears certain":—

"ST. PETERSBURG, Saturday Morning.—The reference to the Afghan frontier question in the Queen's Speech yesterday, a summary of which has been telegraphed here, has created a favourable impression, and is interpreted as showing a desire on the part of England for an early and friendly settlement."

IN reply to another question Lord Randolph said that the question of arming the forces of the Native princes with the Martini-Henry rifle had not as yet come up for the consideration of the Government.

THE two following items of intelligence have reached the Times from Reuter's agency:—

One squadron of the 4th Madras Cavalry, the 8th and 20th Madras Infantry, and the B Company of the Madras Sappers have been ordered to prepare to proceed to Suakin in October next to relieve the native troops now stationed there.

It is believed that the Secretary of State for India has favourably received the urgent recommendation of the Indian Government that the posts of commanders-in-chief of the Bombay and Madras Armies should be abolished, and that in place of the present sub-divisions the entire Indian army should be composed of four Army Corps as was recommended by the Army Commissioner.

WE much regret to learn, on the same authority, that "shocks of earthquake are again being felt in Kashmir."

THE Persian papers learn that the Amir of Afghanistan will shortly undertake a journey through the whole of his country, and will meet at Balkh his father-in-law, the Khan of Bokhara, who is friendly with Russia. Russia has commenced negotiations with Persia for a strategical railway to Zaricin, via Rescht, whence Persia intends constructing a line to Teheran.

THE Native papers are still busying themselves with the change of Ministry, and speculating on its effects on India. Here are a few extracts:—

THE CHANGE OF MINISTRY.

On the accession of the Tory Government to office, we see that the hopes of Anglo-Indians have been raised, and that the Anglo-Indian newspapers have become enthusiastic. We have reasons to entertain apprehension, but the political situation in India has changed, and within the last few years popular opinion in India has become doubly stronger. It is not in the power of the Tory Government to oppose the hopes and aspirations of 240 millions of Indians.—The Nababibhakar.

The policy of England is such that we cannot depend upon the merits or demerits of individuals for our advantage or disadvantage. When Mr. Gladstone opposed Lord Beaconsfield we found him one thing; but when he became Prime Minister we found him another thing. Of the hopes which Mr. Gladstone gave us almost none has been fulfilled. The Arms Act, which he condemned, has not been repealed. So long as we do not make ourselves strong, our miseries will not cease. The people of England administer the country according to their policy. The interests of India are opposed to their interests. Therefore, so long as the people of India are not able to influence the administration of this country as the people of England do that of their country there is no hope of remedying our grievances.—The Ananda Bazar Patrika.

AN INDIAN PARLIAMENT.

It is true that the name "Conservative" has become unpleasant to us; but, if it be carefully considered, we think we may expect a great deal from the Conservatives. In fact, the Liberals and Conservatives are alike to us. Not one of them has up to this time turned his eyes towards India, and there is no possibility of their doing so in future. They are busy with their own interests. So long as the administrative system of India is not changed, so long as we cannot secure a national Parliament, we cannot expect anything in particular for our benefit from the English Ministry.—The Shomaya.

LORD SALISBURY.

We hope that Lord Salisbury will from this time try to govern this vast empire with even-handed justice. It is a remarkable trait in the character of the English nation that so long as they do not take up any work they criticise it in many ways; but when the business is entrusted to them their minds are changed. In the regime of Lord Lytton, when the Arms Act was passed, Mr. Gladstone, then an outsider, condemned the measure in many ways, and abused the Conservatives. In the course of time he became premier, but he did not repeal that Act. As, from the example set by this great man, it appears that the English are one thing out of office and another in, we hope that, when Lord Salisbury has become the premier, he will administer the country calmly and considerately, and give up the hostile feelings he entertained before.—The Someprokash.

We have already more than once expressed our views as to the expediency of affording an outlet for the superabundant martial inclinations of the Native population, and are not surprised that the Someprokash urges on the new Indian Secretary the admission of Native gentlemen to the army. The question of raising the age of admission to the Civil Service, besides being a very open one, sinks into insignificance besides the other. The Someprokash writes:—

Lord Randolph Churchill has been appointed Secretary of State for India. People may say many things against him. We say that his lordship will be able to immortalise his name if he can do one thing,—raise the age of the candidates for the Civil Service examination, and also grant us the privilege of entering the army. He will then secure imperishable fame, and 200 millions of Indians will not shrink from honouring him heartily.

His Lordship's predecessors have failed, one and all, to please the Hindoo Patriot, which paper, in a leading article, expressing gratification at Lord Randolph Churchill's appointment as Secretary of State for India, says:—

Lord Randolph Churchill cannot do worse than any of his three predecessors. We have every hope that he will be an improvement on Lord Cranbrook with his "dittoing" dispositions, on Lord Hartington with his supreme insouciance, and on Lord Kimberley with his disgusting and pitiable emptiness.

THE construction of the telegraph line between Moulmein and the Siam frontier at Myawaddi, a distance of seventy-five miles, to join the proposed Siamese line from Bangkok to Raheng, is expected to be finished before the end of the dry season of 1886. The line from Tavoy to Bangkok is now in working order.

It is not surprising to hear that the difficulties of the French in Madagascar are increasing instead of diminishing:—

Admiral Miot has, we read, sent home pressing requests for reinforcements to enable him to check the enemy. When the mail left three companies of troops were surrounded in the Fort of Majunga, where 12,000 Hovas were attacking them. The fort was completely cut off from communication with the Fleet, and it was considered more than probable that the garrison would be forced to surrender. As this is the first time that the Hovas have descended from their mountains to attack the French in the plains, it is evident that they are gaining confidence from the long inaction and weakness of the French troops. The latter were said to be suffering heavily from disease. The reinforcement of 4,000 men which is about to leave France for Madagascar will relieve the pressure, but it will certainly not suffice for anything like operations of an important character. The Annamites have unconsciously rendered the Hovas a signal service. The rising at Hué has completely changed the situation, and what with the Black Flags in Tonquin and the hostile population in Annam, the French commanders in the East are more likely to demand fresh reinforcements than to be in a position to spare any of their troops for Madagascar or other enterprises.

THE "Fars" informs us as follows: the news, as far as it goes, is favourable, but doubtless contains not a little "gup":—

"The Ameer of Afghanistan," we are told, "has resolved not to renovate and enlarge his palace as he had intended. The sum which would have been thus spent is to be devoted to military purposes. In Herat new infantry barracks for 2,000 men and three ammunition depôts are to be built. In Maimana two redoubts, and in Sirpul a new fort with a revolving platform are to be erected. A council is held every week, at the close of which a courier is always sent to the Viceroy at Simla. Lord Dufferin is said to be now virtually supreme in Afghanistan, and recently lampoons were affixed on several of the mosques, in which the people were ordered to pray for the Ameer Dufar, that is Lord Dufferin, and for the Vice-Ameer Abdur Rahman. One of these lampoons was even delivered to the Ameer, folded up and addressed as though it were a petition, when he went to the mosque. The Commander-in-Chief of the Afghan military forces has been appointed Inspector-General of Fortifications, and his former office will, it is believed, be no longer kept up."

MOST of the Calcutta papers contain telegraphic accounts from all parts of Bengal of the ravages caused by the earthquake of the 14th of July, and these telegrams, says one paper, "continue to pour in." The earthquake seems to have been very widely felt. Its area must have been very great, for, says the Statesman, the whole of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa have suffered to some extent."

"THE City of Palaces had, it would seem, a very narrow escape from the fate of Lisbon in 1755." On the morning of the 14th ult. a heavy trembling was felt throughout the city, followed by several shocks of earthquake, in which the Chowringhee palaces were rocking to and fro, as if at sea.

THE wave seems to have come from the North, the shocks being sensibly felt at Darjeeling, 7,500 feet above sea-level, but in their chief intensity on the plains, immediately below the hills; at Nattore, Serajgunge, and other places, masonry buildings were overthrown, and many persons buried in the ruins.

THE (overland) Englishman devotes several pages to the reports of the event which have reached it from all quarters.

Cbit Chat.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Ceylon Observer writes that a Mr. Crabbe "is working at triangulation near"—wait a bit—"Vavuniyanavilankulam," and that he finds the job a tough one. So should we. We doubt if we should ever get to the end—not of the triangulation—but of the name of the place. Commend us to Madagascar after this. Malagasy names do not, as a rule, exceed fifteen letters, but this unpronounceable place rejoices (can one rejoice in such a thing?) in nineteen letters. Nineteen twenty-sixths of the alphabet!

BUT this is almost as good, as regards the name, that is, not as concerns the poor individual, whom we would gladly have seen immortal:—"The Maharaja of Tiruvadamaruthoor, a small state in the Madras Presidency, died on the 9th May."

WE have been told that a German once produced a combination word of 150 letters. We don't believe it; we think even a German lamp would have paled, and even a German pipe have gone out—if that be possible—before the subjoined appalling title, which the Pioneer has disinterred from among late Bombay publications. Surely it beats all the above! The work is called Shrimanmadhavanripandhanavarnanamatmakapadyaratnamala, and is a lament over the brief reign and untimely death of the Peshwa Madho Rao I. The title will be enough for most people!

THE commander of one of Her Majesty's vessels was, not five years ago, going the rounds on Sunday, when he chanced to look into a locker or bunker, and found poor puss established comfortably there with some new-born kittens. He turned round to the first lieutenant and said, in a most indignant tone, "Mr. — this ought not to have occurred without my previous knowledge and sanction!"

THE Nizam must be a very pleasant visitor—to tradesmen. The other day he went into a shop at Ootacamund, and simply cleared it out at one stroke. Among other things fifty fans were sent, upon the spot, to the Zenana at Harewood, and, lest there should not be enough hands to keep them all going at once, the Prime Minister has ordered up his harem, too. Thirteen ladies—pretty well to begin with—were the batch whose arrival had, thus far, been announced. Fancy the babble—let us rather say the Babel—of tongues!

BABUDOM again! One of the "ten little Babus" must have been to some "eschool" where they taught—

He who fights and runs away,
May live to fight another day!

But not at Rori Gorge, eh, Babu? The Lahore paper writes:—

The following telegram has kindly been placed at our disposal, as deserving of immortality. It was addressed to a distinguished officer of the Royal Engineers, from Rori Gorge, by "all the Babus, Sind and Peshin Railway," and there is no question whatever as to its authenticity:—"All railway Babus assembled. To stay here is instantaneous death. What can Babu give in exchange for his soul. In anticipation of sanction we all leave to-night." And they went, too!

ALAS! for the departed glory of the Rupee, commemorated in the following funeral dirge!

MY INDIAN LOVES.

Still art thou beautiful! Upon thy face
Affection's eye can trace
Its former grace;
And still the rapt beholder cannot fail
Its olden charm to hail
About thy tail!

Still dost thou bear thine universal rule
O'er cloister, camp, and school,
O'er sage and fool;
And as, when first thine empire did begin,
Men labour, strive, and sin,
Thee still to win!

But not the same as thou were wont to be,
Though true my love for thee,
Art thou to me!

Why hast thou fallen from that "two-and-three,"
That filled my heart with glee,
So low, Rupee?

And here is another "Indian Love," in the form of an ode to a cheroot, evidently from the same pen:—

Come, let me set my lips to thine,
And taste of bliss,
And draw thy breath to mix with mine
In one long kiss!

That fragrant breath that scents the air,
And fill's the room,
And sheds about my beard and hair
Its sweet perfume!

Come, let my soft caressing touch
About thee stay,
And o'er the form I love so much
Still idly stray!

That rounded form, so smooth and straight,
So firm and slight,
'Tis but a touch to lift thy weight
So dainty light!

Some scorn thine Eastern birth, and charms
Of dusky hue—
I ween the spark thy bosom warms
Is hot and true
As any 'neath a fairer skin
In western clime—
So we will never heed their din,
My Trichy Prime!—(Bombay Gazette).

MEMOIR OF GENERAL JOHN BRIGGS, OF THE MADRAS ARMY.*

When we tell our readers that John Briggs was in India from the age of sixteen to that of fifty, that he frequently occupied positions of a higher grade than men of the rank he at the time held usually obtain, that he was a constant advocate of Native rights, and that he may be said to have enforced them almost to his death at the age of ninety, it will be felt that a few lines will not be wasted in recalling his career.

Major Evans Bell, whose political opinions on Indian affairs are well known, has markedly shown his sympathy with his hero, perhaps, we think, a little unduly extolling him. His attack of what Macaulay called the "Jes Boswelliana," has, however, been of a mild kind, nothing acute.

Briggs had the great good fortune to be placed, early in his career, on the staff of Sir John Malcolm, one of the old class of Indian diplomatists, who did not domineer over, because they sympathised with, and, therefore, were thoroughly en rapport with, the Courts, whether of Shahs, Sultans, Nawabs, or Rajahs, to whom they were accredited. Nothing has damaged us more in the East than the want of men who are not devoid of sympathy.

* "Memoir of General John Briggs, of the Madras Army." With comments on some of his words and work. By Major Evans Bell. Chatto and Windus. 1885.

There could, as Sir John Kaye's "Life of Malcolm" sufficiently shows, have been no better school than an Attachéship to Malcolm's Persian Embassy, to wean a man from European prejudices, and to give him an insight into, and a sympathy with, the "inner life" of the East. And no one will deny that John Briggs profited to the utmost by his schooling on Sir John's Staff.

It was not until 1815 that Briggs entered on his duties in a post which was to lead him, by rapid steps, to the position practically equivalent to that of Governor of a Province—we mean the post of Assistant to the Resident at Poona, the great Mountstuart Elphinstone, with whom his relations were most cordial to the close of Elphinstone's life. The interviews preliminary to the warlike operations precipitated by the Peshwa, Bajee Rao, in 1817, are well, but at great length, detailed by the then Captain Briggs. It was Mr. Elphinstone's practice to cause some of his Assistants to attend each Conference, and, directly on its termination, to write down the conversation from memory; a comparison of the notes ensuring accuracy. Elphinstone, besides being half a soldier—he had served two campaigns (Assaye and Argaum, 1803-4) with Sir A. Wellesley, and had been at his side in every action and siege—was the best of diplomatists; and his information was so good that Bajee Rao once pettishly complained that Elphinstone knew every dish which was served at his table (p. 49).

Passing over the incidents of the campaign—in which Briggs seem to have done well—we come to his nomination, at its close, in May, 1818, to be, to all intents and purposes, Ruler of Khandesh, his conduct in which post seems to us one of the illustrations of his life, as manifesting his especial power, as an administrator, of evolving order out of chaos.

After a contest or two with his former military superior, now politically his subordinate, on prize questions, and the successful siege of some minor, but almost inaccessible, strongholds, war ceased in August, 1819, and the work of pacification of lawless tribes, in a difficult country, abounding in natural fortresses, was now to begin. The whole of chap. 4 (pp. 75-89) contains interesting, though somewhat long, extracts from Briggs's letters, showing the difficulty of the task set before him, and the firm, yet conciliatory way in which he performed it. We read in p. 78 that, even when quiet had been fairly restored by blockading, as far as could be done, the passes in the Satpura hills, and cutting off the supplies of the marauding Bheels, at the same time offering their chiefs pensions, and allowances for a certain number of men, the work was far from complete. Some would not settle down, but from time to time "broke out" in their old style. They were called in to answer for their misconduct, "and if (says Briggs) they held aloof, I always found a reward of one or two hundred rupees sufficient to induce the Bheels of another district to bring in the accused, who, if convicted—provided there had been no bloodshed in the case—was astonished by the brief term of imprisonment to which I sentenced him." Under the previous régime he would have been put to death, probably by torture.

It is in Khandesh, and in Sattara, in both which Provinces he worked comparatively single-handed, that we see Briggs at his best. He went to Sattara as Resident early in 1823, and remained there till his furlough to England in 1827. As his stay in Khandesh had strengthened his sympathy with the people, so did his residence at Sattara confirm him in his sentiments in favour of the Native Princes. He seems to have read, as by a kind of intuition, the feelings of both, and to have penetrated the "Put yourself in his place," which is the first mystery of his craft to be acquired by every political officer worthy of the name.

While in England (where he nearly experienced the delights of English law in having his things seized for some one else's debts), and, later on, in France, he prepared for the press his really great work on the Land-tax of India. Our readers are aware what a complicated and difficult subject this is, and will probably be grateful to us for not inflicting on them any disquisition on it. But that Briggs grasped it in its entirety with unrivalled clearness, the reputation of his work, and the concurrence in his conclusions of all the best officers and independent students of the subject matter, sufficiently prove.

After being much fêted in England, and having received, even before his return to India, the offer of the Persian Embassy, which, after all, was given to another, Briggs would seem, on arrival at Madras, to have been unemployed for some months; the reason of this is hardly brought out as clearly as might be. He occupied his leisure in travelling on his own account, with especial reference to making further investigations into the Land-tax. A long-expected crisis in Mysore came sooner than was anticipated; the Governor-General told the Maharajah in plain language that he was unfit to govern, and handed over the administration to what may literally be called a dual Contrôl: a Commission of two officers, the senior (Colonel Briggs) nominated by himself, the junior by the Government of Madras.

That this was a risky experiment is beyond a doubt; to appoint two Commissioners with co-ordinate and co-extensive powers can rarely be wise, and here it signally failed. Whatever Briggs's abilities—and that they were exceptionally great this book amply proves—the faculty of working on equal terms with one equal, or nearly so, in rank and power to himself, does not seem to have been among them. This was clearly the opinion of the Court of Directors, none the less clearly, because delicately, expressed (p. 211). During the whole period of two years for which he served in Mysore, he was perpetually in hot water with his brother Commissioner and with the Government of Madras. Lord William Bentinck, then Governor-General, appears to have supported him as far as possible, and administered, more than once, a severe snub to the Government of Madras (then under Mr. S. R. Lushington). But even with this support, Briggs failed to conciliate, or even to work on anything like satisfactory terms with either of his successive colleagues. "Authority, to be efficient, must be single," tersely remarked the Governor of Madras. But the "single" authority was to be the Dewan, plus either of the Commissioners who might chance to agree with him. Such an arrangement would be ludicrous on the stage, but, when applied to the administration of a large province, one can only be amazed that it could ever have been seriously contemplated.

After more than once tendering his resignation, it was accepted, and Briggs entered on his last sphere of Indian duty as Resident at Nagpoor. His period of service there was uneventful, though useful; but is noteworthy, at this date, chiefly for a letter (pp. 223—sq.) addressed by him to Lord Clare, then Governor of Bombay, which contains lucidly, but not concisely—Briggs seems not to have possessed the gift of compression—as admirable a summary of our duties towards Native States as we remember to have seen, and one which might with advantage be placed in the hands of any Indian officer on his first entering on a political career.

The General's health obliged him to resign the Nagpoor Residency in 1835; and, after having, from motives which will readily be appreciated (p. 232), refused the proffered divisional command of the troops in Mysore, he finally quitted the shores of India.

His life in England is aptly described by Major Bell. "From the day that Briggs was relieved from official trammels, and took up his abode in England, he made be said to have gone into opposition against the Government of India." Whatever the subject, Sattara, Hyderabad, Mysore, under discussion in the then Court of Proprietors, so long as a Native State was concerned, there was to be seen the old General's vigorous form, confuting and denouncing. His sympathies were very strong, and usually on the right side. Though latterly too feeble to take an active part in discussion, he never discontinued his correspondence, some of which is of very high interest. In particular we would call attention to a letter (p. 255) from his old friend and colleague, Captain Grant, afterwards Grant-Duff, on the causes of the Indian Mutiny of 1857. His opinion of the average Native Christian (p. 257) may be perused with much benefit by the modern missionary-mongers.

The work contains some amusing incidents, incidents not only amusing, but instructive. Here is a scene which might have been a warning to our rulers in 1857. Yet the question was not about the biting of a cartridge, but the form of a turban. The Deputy Adjutant-General at Hyderabad (Deccan) was, it would seem, like the late Sir G. Brown, a specialist in regimental dress, and what follows was simply an incident in the so-called Vellore Mutiny, which was hatched, as is well known, by Tippoo's sons, and was by no means confined to Vellore.

On accosting a young soldier, "always remarkable for his gentle and affectionate demeanour," the latter said, "Sir, it is of no use calling it a turban; it is a European soldier's hat, and neither I, nor any man in the regiment, would wear it. We would sooner die." On consulting a Native officer of great experience, who had previously served with him, Briggs got but cold comfort. "It was a plot," so said this Native commissioned officer, who had worn this objectionable headdress throughout the previous day without a word being said against it, though many looked askance at it; "but," added he, "take my advice, break up this force, and send the battalions to different stations, where there is a European regiment, and you may then place on our heads any European utensil you think becoming."

We have above hinted our opinion on the manner in which Major Evans Bell has acquitted himself of his self-imposed task. He has executed his work with a strong prepossession in favour of his hero, but with the skill of a practised writer, and we can promise all, who do not for the first time read a work bearing on the abstruse questions of Indian policy, both interest and profit from its perusal.

In one of his pleasant notes Sir Walter Scott tells us that his (real, or supposed) ancestor, the mighty wizard, Michael Scott, was once compelled, for his sins, to find constant employment for a demon, who shall be nameless. To "split Eildon hills in three," to "bridle the Tweed with a curb of stone," these were barely a good night's work for the fiend; who was at last subdued by being put to "the hopeless and endless task of making ropes out of sea-sand."

* "Central Asian Questions." Essays on Afghanistan, China, and Central Asia. By Demetrius C. Boulger. With Portrait and Maps. T. F. Unwin, 1885.

Now, as a rule, the task set to the reviewer, when he has to take up a series of essays, written at different times, and contributed to different periodicals, to gather the various threads (for, even when, as in the present case, the papers deal, on the whole, with one great subject, collateral matters are inevitably introduced), and to show what may be called the "motivo" of the whole, is little less difficult than that which the great enchanter set to his demon. We are thankful to Mr. Boulger that, by a chronological arrangement of the subject-matter of his various essays, and, yet more, by the consistent vein of thought and purpose which pervades them throughout, we have here something better than sea-sand wherewith "to twist us a twine."

In this most interesting and valuable collection—interesting to the reader, valuable as a work of reference—Mr. Boulger covers the entire Eastern question, as between Russia, Persia, and Afghanistan on the West of India, and between Russia and China on the East. For the present we propose to confine our attention to the former, as the more immediately pressing; without, however, in any way underrating the really stupendous importance of the latter, to which we hope very shortly to refer.

The volume begins with an Essay on "Russia's Empire in Central Asia, in which its gradual expansion is clearly traced, and which is, in fact, the motivo of the Essays which will at present come under our notice. This paper, contributed to the Times some two years ago, seems to us especially valuable as a concise, historical, résumé of the Central Asian position up to that date. No one can read it without observing the stress which the writer lays, and most justly lays, on the purely artificial, and, therefore, temporary, nature of the Russian frontier. "Except," says the author, "in the mountain boundary with the Chinese Empire in the East, and for a short distance of the course of the Oxus in the West, it is an irregular and arbitrary line, rather than a well-defined and natural barrier. It is, therefore, in its nature one that is not calculated to prove permanent. . . . It is only too evident that the existing limits of Russian authority are nothing more than temporary." We thoroughly agree with Mr. Boulger that these limits are not, and were never meant to be, anything but temporary; remembering, too, the two Bolgrads after the Crimean war, the two Sarakhs, and, now again, the two Zulfikars. But we think that it was an error to consider the Oxus, or any part of it, as a "defined frontier." We do not, since, by crossing the Halys, the king of old "destroyed," as the oracle had foretold, "a great kingdom"—his own—remember many instances in which a river has permanently formed a satisfactory boundary against an aggressive state.

One remark in this Essay, though it may be thought a truism, deserves especial attention from our statesmen. "The lines of communication and the means of locomotion are of prime interest and importance in the case of a foreign dominion established at a great distance from the centre of the Empire. Russia enjoys the inestimable advantage of having her communications altogether within her power. There is none to dispute, or in any way to hinder, her right of way." We are not on a par with Russia until we shake ourselves free of the Suez Canal. Our communications, in the present state of affairs are, except round the Cape, not "altogether within our power," and even round the Cape only by permanently maintaining ships built for the purpose. By a combination of railway traffic on the Transcasian line, and of the Oxus navigation up to Charjui, where the Russians have a naval station, regarding which (p. 15) more accurate information is highly desirable, the White Tsar can move troops without leaving "his own grounds" as surely as the Dukes of Argyll and Sutherland can go on their own land nearly from one end to the other of their respective counties. Nor is this any new idea. The very next Essay, on "Peter the Great and Russia's policy," shows us the energetic Peter, prescient as usual, and possessing "unusually accurate geographical information for the time." Pointing to the trans-Caspian mountains, he said to one of his officers—who had proposed a fanciful scheme for sending goods by the Siberian water-system into the Pacific, and thence by ship to India:—"Have you ever been in the Gulf of Astrabad? You must know, then, that those mountains extend to Astrabad, and that from there to Balkh and Badakshan with pack camels is only a twelve days' journey, and on that road to India no one can interfere with us."

Nor does it seem, judging from our author's next Essay on "England's Policy towards Afghanistan," that the successor of Peter—we don't mean the Pope, but the Tsar—need fear much interference, for we are told (p. 49): "Lord Lawrence himself admitted that the Afghans have always joined, and will always in the future join, any army which, with reasonable prospect of success, advances on the Indus with the intention of invading India." Cold comfort this after the many lakhs which have from time to time found their way to Kabul!

Mr. Boulger reviews the history of our policy towards Afghanistan with a severity little short of merciless, and yet not unduly severe. It is difficult to speak in sufficiently harsh terms of the shift—or shiftless—"policy" pursued for many years past; and, sooth to say, by Governments of both parties. Especially was this uncertain, groping—if we may use the phrase—attitude visible during the intestine warfare in Afghanistan which followed the death of Dost Mahomed. The mot d'ordre was non-interference. People forgot that.

"Tua res agitur paries quum proximus ardet," that you can't safely let your neighbour's house be aflame, and sit still, smoking your cigarette as usual. As Mr. Boulger very sensibly puts it:—"A sympathetic mood towards the difficulties of an Afghan Ruler, during the years of warfare, would have facilitated the arrival of that day when British influence must be supreme South of the Hindoo Koosh; and that would have been the case whether we pinned our faith to the person of Shere Ali or one of his brothers. All that was necessary was that we should be consistent to our word and our declarations. But we were true neither to Shere Ali, nor to Afzul, nor yet to Azim. We fluttered helplessly from one side to the other, and our responsible Statesmen showed neither common sense nor foresight." What was the result? Lewis Pelly, than whom no better selection could have been made, was nominated to confer with Noor Mahomed Shah, the adviser and representative of Shere Ali, who had been recognised by us as Ameer. The negotiations "proved abortive, Shere Ali still distrusted us. The promises from Taskkent were more specious, and apparently more attractive. Shere Ali thought they were also more to be depended on." To such a pass had vacillation and uncertain action brought us.

The close of this paper, and the whole of the next, as well as all No. 6 (written before the Russian seizure of Merv), are devoted to the consideration of the propriety of holding Kandahar. "Our statesmen," said the author, in 1879, "have to remember that all their policy will have been in vain, that the sacrifices of men and money, of Indian treasure, too precious to be wasted, will have been utterly useless, if the terms of peace (with Afghanistan) which we shall exact do not, in addition to rectifying a frontier, prepare the way for an easy occupation of Herat, whenever Russia's aggressiveness may render that step necessary." Mr. Boulger quotes Sir H. Rawlinson, "the only man who, as Ferrier says, came out of our Afghan blunders with credit," as enforcing the necessity of taking up an unshakable position in Afghanistan; "in securing this position," he adds, "Kandahar is the first measure. That town is the keystone of the arch."

We now approach an Essay, of which our author is, he says, "exceptionally proud, because its forecasts have been so accurately fulfilled." We give Mr. Boulger all credit for his prevision, and can only deplore the fact that it should have been so exactly verified by events. We allude to the paper, "Merv, What Next?"

In both this, and a previous essay, on "Herat and the Turko-mans," Mr. Boulger considers the line of conduct to be pursued by our Government. He rightly enough observes that we must, in the first instance, act through the Ameer, who "is in our pay, has accepted our rupees . . . his personal predilections will not blind him as to the chances of the policy on which he may be secretly bent; and an Afghan is as little likely to be swayed by gratitude to a former host as by the weakness of a Government which supplies him with money without asking for anything in return. . . It is above all things imperative that there shall be no longer room for doubt on this subject. Abdurrahman must be either on our side or against us. We cannot permit him to fill his coffers with Indian rupees in order that, when the hour of peril comes, he may quietly attach himself to the side of Russia. . The Government may have to make an unpleasant discovery on the subject of the Ameer's sentiments; but, if they only ascertain beyond dispute what is the fact, they will, at all events, have eliminated some doubtful quantities from the problem."

One more very necessary warning, very well expressed, and we have done: "The greatest peril with which we shall ever have to deal is a false sense of security, whether in the strength of our position in India, or in the efficacy of our arrangements with the Native Princes who hold the border States and Provinces on our North-West Frontier."

With these quotations, enforcing sentiments which we have often expressed, we take, for the present, our leave of Mr. Boulger. With his remarks on the important part which the seemingly—but only seemingly—somnolent China is likely to play, in the not distant future, in our conflict with Russia—her enemy as well as our own—we must deal in a future issue. The work is a veritable mine of information on all "Central Asian Questions," and as such we can cordially and conscientiously commend it.

At length there is some hope for England! Islam is actually going to have a temple in London. Deen, Deen! As a contemporary observed, a little while since:—

"We don't want to fight
But, by Jingo, if we do—
We've protestant and catholic,
Turk, infidel, and Jew,
We've God and 'Mammon,' Allah,
Buddha, Brahma, and Vishnu,
We've collared all the deities,
So what can Russia do?"

ADEN.

WHAT Indian civilian or officer is there, who has not seen with a sensation akin to joy on his homeward, and with a decidedly different feeling on his outward, voyage, the burnt-up crater of Aden? Its motley inhabitants notwithstanding, the place is certainly not lively even on a first visit, though ladies fresh from England commonly find a good deal to gaze at. As a rule, if on your way home, you are burning to get the earliest glimpse of the dear ones; if on your way out, every day for which you are not drawing allowances is a day lost. Thus it comes to pass that every hour passed in coaling at Aden is grudged, and the place, like Mumbo Jumbo in "Tom Cringle," anathematised "very particularly."

And yet the unpopular place is, at present, and, so long as the semblance even of traffic through the Suez Canal be maintained, will always be, one of inestimable value, the loss of which would hit us harder than that of many a fertile district in India. We have always advocated a constant state of preparation for a compulsory return to the Cape route to India. We think the necessity of reverting to it not at all unlikely to occur. Yet by no means is it to be dissembled that, at present, the Canal and the Red Sea are the route to India, and that, on this route, Aden is, after passing Suez, incomparably the most important point.

In all probability, not one in a hundred of those who pass it have ever given a moment to the thought, what the occupation of this position is to the communication between us and India, and how easily it could be rendered valueless. It is the westernmost of the coaling stations in the Indian seas, and the loss of its enormous coal stores would cripple, not only the mail steamers, but our entire East India squadron, who would, in the absence of coal, have to make the best of their way under sail, possibly against adverse winds, Eastward to the nearest place where they could replenish their bunkers, being meanwhile useless against an enemy's squadron.

And this is by no means an improbable contingency. The extreme inflammability of coal which is exposed throughout the day to a tropical sun is notorious; and that, shortly before the actual declaration of war, a Russian or French steamer could, by firing a few petroleum shells, set the whole store in an inextinguishable blaze, no reasonable being can doubt.

When first taken by the late Captain Haines in 1839, Aden was an important station of the then Indian Navy, which used to patrol the coasts of the Persian Gulf and Indian Ocean. Its capture may be remembered as being the first annexation of territory in the reign of Her present Majesty. And this circumstance brought it for the first time to the notice of the average Briton. But its exceptionally favourable position had not escaped the ancient strategists and colonists. Whether or not it be the Eden mentioned in Ezekiel, there can be little, if any, doubt that it corresponds with the Adana where Constantius, in the first half of the fourth century, established a Christian mission, and which formed an entrepôt between the provinces of the Roman Empire and the East. And its importance in those times may be inferred from the innumerable reservoirs for water, which alone betoken the existence of a larger population than the 20,000 shown by the census, and beyond which Dr. Hunter anticipates no considerable increase.

Nor were the Turks behindhand in recognising the importance of its unique position. They held it for about a century, and, on their expulsion, it again passed into the hands of the native rulers. But the place was too important to remain in the possession of barbarians, and it was not long ere attempts were made to seize it. Unsuccessfully, however; and it was not until 1839 that, as above said, its Arab rulers were compelled finally to relinquish their sway.

But British commercial instincts ought to recognise that it is not merely as a fortress, commanding the narrowest part of the Red Sea, that Aden is valuable to us. It is a commercial port of very great importance. During the thirty-six years of British rule, the population, at first 6,000, more than trebled itself, and the trade rose from £100,000 per annum to four-and-a-quarter millions. "Aden," says Dr. Hunter, "now forms not only the great seat of the Arabian trade with Africa, but an entrepôt and place of transshipment for an ever-increasing European and Asiatic commerce."

Aden appears to have received somewhat stepmotherly treatment at the hands of the Indian Government. As the Bombay Gazette justly enough observes:—

The attitude of the Indian Government has not hitherto been in all respects as favourable to the commercial community in Aden and interested in Aden had a right to expect it to be. When early in last year the necessity was urged upon them of deepening the inner harbour, so that vessels of large draught might enter at all states of the tide, they answered that the subject was of little interest to the Indian Marine, inasmuch as the largest vessel in that service can enter the harbour at ordinary tides.

Can anything well be more absurd, or more shortsighted, than to delay for an hour deepening a harbour which may in time of need have to shelter vessels of more than twice the size of those of the Indian Marine? And this, too, at a time when the Services are suggesting (as will be seen by an extract from the United Service Gazette in our "Notes") that the passage to India might be shortened by several days were the rate of speed increased by employing vessels of greater size and horse-power than those of the P. and O. Company.

Nor can it be pleaded that the port is in any way using a claim to sue in formâ pauperis. At the present moment there is a balance in hand of about two lakhs, and the annual surplus is now about 80,000 rupees. There is every reason, therefore, for the belief, that the cost of the proposed improvement could be met without any addition to the existing shipping dues. It is difficult to indicate any ground of objection which the Government of India can take, either to the early constitution of a Port Trust for Aden, or to the early commencement of the works which are so urgently needed.

Here, then, is a port, naturally strong—being in part protected by the walls of the crater in which it is situate—occupying a position of quite exceptional importance, susceptible of a great extension, for which funds are already, to a considerable extent, in hand (and what could be easier than for the Government to advance the balance required on the security of the 80,000 rupees of annual surplus revenue from the port?), and already an important entrepôt.

What are we doing to protect this most valuable possession? Absolutely nothing. Dr. Hunter, indeed, although telling us that Aden is “not only the great seat of the Arabian trade with Africa, but an entrepôt and place of transshipment for an ever-increasing European and Asiatic commerce,” assures us, with true official optimism, and with unconscious irony, that “the fortifications of Aden are now of a character commensurate with the importance of the place.” They could not at this present moment resist a second-rate ironclad, possessing heavy metal. A landing might, it is true, be prevented by the troops, though even this is doubtful. But it would be Troja fuit: the place would have ceased to exist.

It is true, that the War Secretary, early last month, enumerated measures for the defence of our coaling stations (thus, by the way, contradicting Dr. Hunter as to the value of present defences). But a crisis may come at any moment, and it is well recognised that months, if not years, must elapse before the Moncrieff guns, which, it is understood, are to form a prominent feature in the scheme of defence, can be supplied and properly mounted.

One would naturally look to the Navy for the protection of our ports and coaling stations, pending the completion of the needful fortifications. But it is no secret that there are not in Eastern waters half-a-dozen really seaworthy men-of-war (and even these, be it remembered, cannot be ubiquitous), to resist the Russian fleet, said to number twenty-seven sail, but of the composition of which we know as little as we do of the Russian movements west or north of Afghanistan; and which twenty-seven can obviously be utilised for attacking, or holding to ransom, more places than our six can defend.

But Aden is our present objective point; and, if anything we have said should in any way accelerate the arrival of the day when adequate fortifications shall defend an adequately deepened and enlarged harbour, we shall feel that we have not spoken wholly in vain.

THE Times mentions that a bust of Babu Pearichand Mittra has been placed for exhibition in one of the Committee-rooms at the India Office. The sculptor is, as usual, not an Englishman. Why are these commissions so invariably given to anyone rather than the countrymen of Chantrey and Flaxman? Again, why do not natives try their hand at something of the kind? They are unrivalled for lightness of hand and delicacy of touch. Fancy an English jeweller telling by touch alone the difference between equal weights of fifteen and eighteen carat gold? Yet we know that natives do exactly this same thing all over India, and every day of the week. A native sculptor of any merit would, from mere esprit de pays, have more commissions than he could execute.

THIS might have been expected. Have “the authorities” no sense left? or have they never had any? The Civil and Military Gazette says:—

When preparations for war were being made, and transport animals were being purchased in large numbers, during March and April, two or three well-known horse-dealers of the Punjab made extensive purchases, and supplied a great many ponies to the committee at Rawul Pindi. When, however, these preparations ceased, the dealers found their occupation suddenly gone. They accordingly represented to the authorities that owing to Mr. Gladstone's sudden change of policy, a large number of animals had been left on their hands, with which they did not know what to do, and they considered it a hardship that in consequence of their disinterested services to the State in supplying transport animals during a critical period, they should now be allowed to be sufferers. As the complaint seemed a reasonable one, the dealers were offered Rs. 10,000 as compensation for their losses; but even this not being accepted as satisfactory, the military authorities were directed to buy up, at the usual prices, the 159 animals which were said to be still unsold. The dealers have accordingly been called upon to produce their ponies before the purchasing committee, and it is said that the men are now straining every nerve to find the requisite number.

TEA CULTIVATION IN THE PUNJAB.—Steady progress continues to be reported in this industry. In 1883 there were 1,894 tea gardens in existence, showing a slight advance upon the previous year. Out of the total number of gardens, only 44 are European plantations, the remainder being worked and owned by natives. The total area under cultivation is returned as 9,056 acres, of which 5,708 acres and 2,256 acres represent the area under mature and immature plants respectively, and 1,092 acres the area taken up for planting but not yet planted out. In 1883 the total outturn of tea was 1,300,000lb., of which 984,405lb. was black tea and 315,605lb. green. Of the total outturn, 899,957lb. was the yield of the European plantations and 400,053lb. that of the native gardens. Compared with 1882 there was an increase in the outturn of 81,491lb. The increase was due to the European gardens, and occurred chiefly in the manufacture of black tea. The average yield per acre of mature plants was 209lb. to 257lb. per acre on European plantations and 147lb. on native gardens. The cost of cultivation per acre was Rs. 64 4a. for European gardens, and Rs. 27 9a. for native, while the cost of manufacture per pound was 4 annas and 3 annas respectively. The area under mature plants has been enlarged during the past year, but that under immature plants is stationary. The yield in black tea was much larger, while that of green tea was less. On the whole, the quantity given forth to the market exceeded the outturn for 1882 by nearly 100,000lb. The seasons were favourable and the difficulty in disposing of the produce was sensibly diminished.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, AUGUST 24, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, August 4th; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, August 2nd.

THE latest news is contained in the weekly telegram of the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, who telegraphs on Sunday, 23rd:—

The work of fortifying Herat is making steady progress. Three thousand men are engaged, so the city should soon be prepared to resist a sudden attack, if not a long siege. The garrison, 12,000 strong, is encamped in the neighbourhood. Further British contributions, in the shape of a quantity of gunpowder and a number of pickaxes for fortification work, are now being sent thither.

Colonel Mirza Attaulla Khan, the British Envoy, arrived at Cabul on the 9th. A guard of honour met him at the frontier, and he was hospitably entertained at Jellalabad and other halting places. On arriving at Cabul he was received with considerable ceremony and much cordiality by the Ameer, who, he reports, showed him the greatest kindness.

Reports have reached India which, if trustworthy, and there seems no reason to doubt their authenticity, show that the Russians are steadily pushing on their communications. It is stated that a contract has been given for making a railway from Merv to Chirchik and that the Askaniya line has been completed to within a march of Bami, also that the road is finished to Geok Tepe and that work has been begun on the Merv-Tejend section. The canal works in the neighbourhood of Merv and the Tejend are also said to be progressing and the rebuilding of Merv is in contemplation.

A number of labourers are being sent from the Punjab to the Bolan and Hurnai Railway. Now that the cholera seems to be dying out, it is hoped that the work will proceed rapidly, although the heat is reported to be very great.

THE subjoined, from the Russian Nord, of Brussels, is satisfactory enough; but also most instructive, as showing how Russia invariably draws in her horns when firmly met. Lo and behold, she has now had special maps prepared, and these show that the Zulfikar dispute "is in no wise justified by the importance of the positions in question."

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Nord says that the danger of an Anglo-Russian conflict may be considered removed, and that the topographical plans of the Afghan localities known by the collective name of Zulfikar have at last been received at St. Petersburg. The examination of these plans gave rise to the conviction that the difference existing is in no way justified by the importance of the positions in question.

WOULD this decision have been come to three months ago, when Russia had to face a Government here of mere ideologues? By the plain-speaking of the present Administration the Zulfikar Pass, which (not to speak of our having promised it to the Ameer,) is really important, has been saved, just as Bolgrad, to which we have already referred, was saved after the Crimean war. Can anyone doubt that Merv and Sarakhs could similarly have been preserved by even the appearance of firmness and consistent conduct?

OUR readers will be amused at the Dayanodaya's lucubrations on Hindu dress. Curious variations on said dress have long been visible in more parts of London than one:—

The Hindu dress cannot always remain as it is. India is changing, and with new conditions new modes of dress must follow. A greater regard to the natural instinct, and a greater attention to utility, must bring about a modification of the present dress. The beginning of this change is already visible, and though the change must be slow, still the final dress will be one which the changed civilisation of India will demand. If, therefore, the more forward already don clothing that is neither European nor native, this is to be expected, nor can it have a serious denationalising effect, so long as sufficient of the native remains to distinguish the wearer from the foreigner. . . . Indeed, it is hard to imagine, as a rule, any worthy or honourable motive for adopting an entirely European dress. There is reason for modifying the native dress, but none for being a native in fact and a European in sham.

WE did not think that much had been left undone to disgust the Indian regiments who crossed the black water, to serve us in Egypt. But it seems that we had not wholly bottomed the affair. What can be said of the widows of those who have been killed, and have a pension of some three halfpence a-day, being no longer able to draw it in their own village, but having to trudge to the nearest military station, as often as not sixty to one hundred miles away, at their own expense, and (also at their own expense) take with them at least two witnesses to identity? What could have been devised more certain to check recruiting and to create disgust? And what is the money value of a pension obtainable only on such terms? Yet so says the usually well-informed Times of India. We can only hope that their article may attract the notice of someone who really has at heart the interests of the Indian Army.

Few, probably, of our military readers are aware that "officers of the British Service, formerly of the Indian Army, proposing to retire after December, 1884, on Indian pension . . . will, by so doing forfeit any claims to pension for their widows and compassionate allowances for their children." So says, in the Bombay Gazette, a Bengal officer, in a letter, copy of which will be found in the United Service Gazette of the 22nd inst., p. 621, and the perusal of which we most strongly recommend to all concerned.

WE give the subjoined for what it may be worth, remarking only that Russo-Afghan encounters are usually of a very different character:—

A collision between Russian and Afghan outposts nearly occurred on the 13th inst. at Kara Tepe, eighteen miles from Chamani Baid. A few Russian troopers approached the former place, and the Afghans stood to their arms. The Russian officer ordered his men to unsling their carbines, and was accidentally shot by one of his own men in obeying the order. The Afghans detained the Russians pending orders from Herat, treating the wounded man kindly, and finally sent him back to Chamani Baid. The Afghans—according to the telegram from Meshed of the 21st inst. which gives this news—have been exonerated from all blame, and have been thanked for their humanity by the Russian commander, who has promised that his men will not again advance beyond Chamani Baid.

A TELEGRAM from India states that Lieutenant-General Sir F. Roberts embarked on Tuesday for England for a short period of rest, preparatory to taking over command of the Indian Army, but his presence in England will be taken advantage of, it is believed, to arrange several important changes. One thing it is certain he will do—press for an increase of the European Army, in view of contingencies which may at any moment arise on the frontier.

A COLLEGE for females is about to be established at Goa. The Archbishop has interested himself in the project. The college will be under the management of two trained schoolmistresses imported from Europe.

THIS story, for the truth of which the Rangoon Gazette makes itself responsible, may be instructive to the advocates of the Ilbert Bill. We give it for what it may be worth:—

The following tiger story comes from the Kungpore district. I can vouch for the truth of the tale, having obtained it from an undeniable source. A claim for rupees six thousand and odd has been made on the Bengal Government, for rewards for the destruction of eighty-one tigers and 336 tiger cubs in one of the sub-divisions of that district. It is true that the district in question is notorious for tigers, but if this story is true they must be as plentiful as mosquitos. The fact is that the native shikarris, finding they had a Bengali Babu to deal with in the capacity of deputy magistrate, played a bold but clumsy trick on him, by bringing in the heads of wild cats, and he was unable to detect the imposture. The story illustrates the gross ignorance of many of the native deputy magistrates in everyday matters; common sense is not a distinguishing trait in the Bengali character. Had it been a Griff just out from home, such blind ignorance would not have been excusable, for it would have been expected that he would have some idea as to the appearance of a tiger; if he had never seen the live animal he would surely have seen a picture of it.

THE Liberal, the organ of the "New Dispensation" sect, thus writes of the influence of woman. When will our native belief subjects estimate it at its real value?—

The influence of woman upon the early formation of a Church is a matter of history. Remember that Mahommed's first convert was his wife. Christ's Church was built on the tender devotion of woman. The following lines appear in the "Dawn of Morning":—

"Not she with trait'rous kiss her Saviour stung,
Not she denied Him with unholy tongue;
She, while apostles shrank, could danger brave,
Last at His cross, and earliest at His grave."

THE subjoined note, referred to in our article on Aden in last week's issue, was accidentally omitted:—

"THE news," remarks the United Service Gazette, "that the Cunarder Etruria recently did the voyage from New York to Queenstown in six days eleven hours and twenty-eight minutes, has not unnaturally given rise to the question why passengers across the Atlantic should have the monopoly of fast ocean-going steamers. Our Indian contemporaries comment upon the fact that with such vessels as the Etruria the voyage from Bombay to Suez would be reduced from eleven or twelve days to six, and a corresponding gain would be made on the other side. As the fare to India is quite as high in proportion to the distance traversed as that from Liverpool to New York, the only reason for the difference of speed at which the two journeys are performed would seem to be the close competition in one case, and the absence of all competition in the other. On the Indian line, too, the steamers have the advantage of a heavy postal subsidy. There can be no doubt that the directors of the P. and O. would be willing to put on steamers equal in speed to the Etruria if it paid them to do so. The question is, what would be the additional subsidy which would pay them for the additional rate of speed? It seems to us that it would be cheap to pay almost any sum to obtain a fleet of vessels which would practically halve the distance between England and India.

THE outbreak of cholera in Guzerat has, we learn, caused much consternation among the residents in the affected districts, and they have been busily engaged in making puja on a grand scale in order that the course of the disease may be stayed. A correspondent furnishes the following description of the curious ceremony:—

Like the Hellenes of old, the natives regard cholera as a plague sent by some offended deity to punish offending mortals, and believe that the deity must be propitiated with offerings accompanied by prayers for the removal of the affliction. Accordingly poor fisher-folk of Gandevi and other communities in the vicinity, alarmed by the recent ravages of the epidemic, raised subscriptions to defray the expenses of the ceremony of assuaging the wrath of the goddess of cholera. Every member of the community contributed his mite willingly. A cloth effigy of the Mata (goddess of cholera), was accordingly made and enthroned in a miniature temple, which was then placed in a temple belonging to the fisher-folk. One of the men, pretending to be possessed or inspired by the Mata, squatted himself in front of her effigy, and violently rocking his body backwards and forwards, delivered many prophecies in the name of the Mata. In this temple her worshippers assembled every evening for several days, chanted hymns in her praise, and concluded the ceremony with deep potations of "bevera," or mhowra liquor. The Mata was believed to be propitiated after some thirty gallons, on a moderate estimate, of "bevera" had been quaffed in her honour. A day was appointed to take leave of her, or rather to politely dismiss her. Great preparations were made for her ladyship's departure, and some 500 of her worshippers assembled in front of the temple to form a procession. This was a very curious spectacle. A young buffalo and a couple of sheep, which formed the live-offerings, headed the procession, followed by men carrying the Mata in her miniature temple of wicker-work covered with turkey-red. The bearers of the image were followed by a band of musicians beating their tom-toms and blowing their pipes as hard as they could. To these succeeded men carrying coloured rice and various other offerings, with earthen censers from which the curling smoke of incense and sandalwood perfumed the air. Nor were torches wanting, although the ceremonial took place in broad daylight. The procession, viewed as a whole, had a most grotesque effect, but was regarded as a very solemn affair by the superstitious natives. They marched to a neighbouring village about a mile distant, where the Mata and her belongings, i.e., the animals and other offerings, were handed over to the people to be carried further with additional offerings; for it is her privilege to claim purveyance from every village she enters. Thus she is carried from village to village in a given direction, until she reaches a gaum by the sea or jungle-side. Here the people place the Mata and the offerings she may have accumulated during her progress, on the borders of the jungle or by the sea-side, under some ancient tree, and solemnly take final leave of her. Let it be added, in justice to the Mata, that cholera abated on Sunday, as had been predicted by her devotees. We had only three fatal cases on that day.

WE view with regret and sympathy the state of the Indian Telegraph Service, which not only seems, but (if we may fully accept the statements of one of its members who addressed the Times on the 21st as "Justitia") has reason to be, in a state of something more than subacute discontent. He complains of what would almost seem a distinct breach of faith, in having to submit here to a stiffish examination as a candidate for appointments, advertised as vacant, but which were all filled up in India before—so we gather—the result of the examination was even known there. He further says that memorials of members of the Service are never even answered; and they lead a life of great exposure and hardship on a bare subsistence allowance. Remembering that the telegraph yields the Government an annual profit of nearly eight lakhs, it would seem that, if the allegations of unfair treatment be well-founded, something might well be done for the benefit of the sufferers. In any case, they should be assured that their representations shall receive courteous and sympathetic consideration.

Chit Chat.

Few positions in life are more embarrassing than to preside at an organ which "when you strike one note insists upon playing another." What can be done? as you do not, and cannot know what the light-headed instrument is going to do.

PEOPLE are always—and sometimes not without reason—chaffing printers' devils. But we have rarely seen a better thing than this from New York:—"A review of the Revised Version of the Old Testament bore rather an unfortunate title. The (printer's Devil converted the 'Revised Bible' into the 'Ruined Bible.'"

"FORESTALLING and regrating." Is the Act against these high crimes and misdemeanours still in force? And does it apply to India? If so, we don't know what fearful penalties might be undergone by some grain dealers in Kattywar, who, after due consultation of the stars, have been informed that there is to be no rain for two months, and are hoarding corn in consequence, on the spec. of a rise in price. They had better look out for squalls, and take legal, instead of stellar, advice.

WHAT a novelty to see ladies tilting at the ring! They say the fair sex is "trying it on" at Naini Tal. May they succeed at a gymkhana! The exercise is amusing and exciting, without being dangerous to a lady who will keep her eyes open both for herself and for her horse.

WE think it uncommonly mean of the Law Journal to vaticinate in an underhand way the fall of the present Government ere it is well formed. Yet listen to what it says about the new Attorney-General's early career:—"Mr. Webster was celebrated as a runner of short distances, an accomplishment which may or may not be ominous of the career of the Government of which he is a member."

WHY should increased dignity produce diminished efficiency? We have the fact on the highest authority, that of the Pope, who praised a certain Archbishop of Canterbury in a distinctly decreasing minor scale. The Archbishop's present successor, who is our informant, through the Times, assuredly does not deserve the "trepidus" or "remissus." "Six hundred years ago," said Dr. Benson, "one of my predecessors received from the Pope a letter addressed to him in these remarkable terms:—'To the most fervent monk, to the warm-hearted abbot, to the lukewarm bishop, and to the idle archbishop.' This was the character which he had earned for himself, 'Monacho ferventissimo, abbati calido, episcopo tepido, archi-episcopo remisso.' He was glad to be able to say that those days were past, and that the longer one lived now the more work there was to do." Well done, old and beloved schoolmaster! Your pupils found the last sentence emphatically true while under your tutelage!

YOUNG ladies, whose musical progress, like an invalid's health, is "not all that her best friends could wish," may console themselves with a Royal failure (in all senses) in music. The Italian who had the honour of teaching George III. the violin, on being asked by his Royal pupil what progress he was making, observed, "Please your Majesty, there are three classes of players—1, those who cannot play at all; 2, those who play badly; 3, those who play well. Your Majesty is just rising into the second class."

LA BELLE HÉLÈNE in a crinoline! Well, the idea is funny; but, as we are assured by the St. James's Gazette, probable. Surely the writer must, like the immortal critic of Eatanswill in Pickwick, have read for crinoline under the letter C, and for Helen under the letter H, and "combined his information!" Where would he room, in a little skiff, for Helen, her crinoline, and her dear Paris?

DURING the late campaign in the Soudan a private of the 1st Life Guards was reported as having been killed, and his number was struck off the rolls. This happened some months ago. The other day, however, a knock was heard at the door of the surgeon's quarters at Knightsbridge Barracks, and was followed up by the entrance of the "corpse." "Come to report myself, sir," the official by dead man genially remarked, giving the usual salute. "I'm not dead. I've just come up from Netley Hospital, and the head surgeon desired me to report myself to you for duty." The surgeon gasped. The man was there; but he was officially dead. He retreated into a corner of the room and greeted the corpse as follows:—"Now, look here, so-and-so; if you are not dead, I'm very glad to see you again, for you were always a very steady man, and I shall be delighted to shake hands with you; but if you are dead (as I have every reason to believe you are), kindly oblige me by going away, as I can't be bothered with corpses." The "corpse," however, eventually succeeded in convincing the surgeon and the other authorities of his being alive and not dead, and is now once more brilliant in breast-plate and helmet.

Punch once parodied the celebrated "Afflictions sore," &c., as applicable to a railway engine. It ran:—

"Collisions four Or five she bore,
The signals was in vain;
Till, old and rusted,
Her biler busted,
And smashed the excursion train.
"Her end was pieces."

HERE is an old woman's epitaph, failing from Yankee land, quite superior to "Afflictions":—

"Here lies a poor woman, who always was tired,
Who lived in a house where help was not hired;
Her last words on earth were—'Dear friends, I am going
Where washing ain't done, nor sweeping, nor sewing;
But everything there is exact to my wishes:
For where they don't eat there's no washing up dishes.
I'll be where loud anthems will always be ringing,
But, having no voice, I'll get clear of the singing.
Don't mourn for me now, don't mourn for me never,
I'm going to do nothing, for ever and ever."

A HORSE was comically enough defined the other day. Hardly more comically than the Bheel here:—"The Bheel is a black man, only more hairy. When you meet a Bheel he shoots your body with an arrow, and throws you into a ditch. By this you may know the Bheel."

A LITTLE girl suffering with the mumps declared that she "felt as though a headache had slipped down into her neck."

ONE always gladly notes the progress of civilisation. Par exemple! Mr. Bright had said, as the Times of India reminds us, that he was glad to learn that our noble English language, the language of Milton, was becoming better known in India, and was spreading to the masses of the people—or words to that effect. The other day, happening to be walking by the barracks, I received, says the writer, a striking proof of the correctness of Mr. Bright's assertion. Three very small native boys were having an improvised game of cricket. The wicket was represented by a piece of board resting against a large stone, the bat was a splint from some old box, and the ball was old and angular. The day was hot, and the three little cricketers had dispensed with cricketing costume. In fact, they had nothing on but the shiny brown skin with which kind Mother Nature had endowed them at their birth. But they played the game with the utmost earnestness and vigour, as they had often seen the soldiers doing outside the barracks. "Pla-a-a-y!" shouted the bowler, as he delivered the ball from a distance of about five yards. "Hout!" exclaimed the wicket-keeper, joyfully, as the board tumbled down. "Dam!" said the youthful batter, energetically, as he gave up the bat and took up the ball. Truly, I thought, as I watched this scene, Mr. Bright is quite right, and the knowledge of our noble English language, the language of Milton, is decidedly filtering down to the masses of the people.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE COMING STRUGGLE FOR INDIA.*

This book, as its author states in his dedication, is "the substance of the various addresses" delivered by him on his recent "lecturing tour" in this country. It is, therefore, naturally written in a tolerably popular style, and it contains much which will interest every educated Englishman. Moreover, it is prefaced by a map which, though on a small scale, is a model of clearness, and which shows at a glance the whole progress of Russian encroachments from the Baltic towards India and China, since 1745, now just 140 years ago. We, here in England, have seen many a change since the Battle of Culloden; but all that has happened here is thrust into the shade by the enormous expansion of Russia.

The events which have led to the constant extension of the Russian Empire have been repeatedly narrated, and, as might have been expected, from various points of view. We have heard them, over and over again, described as inevitable when civilisation comes into immediate contact with barbarism, though this is hardly the view which has commended itself to far-seeing statesmen. Certainly neither the "Liberal" Palmerston, nor the Conservative Disraeli, perhaps the two most prescient statesmen who have, of late years, swayed the destinies of England, wholly held it. The late Sir John Kaye, indeed, used to look forward with pleasure to the day when "the Sepoy and the Cossack should meet." Meet! yes, but where? "On the banks of the Oxus." Now, where are they likely to meet?

Much of this book is, thanks to the writings of the author himself, of the late Sir Bartle Frere, of Colonel Malleson, and of Sir H. Rawlinson (not to mention Mr. Marvin), practically ancient history. But there are one or two points to which attention may profitably be directed. The extreme aversion entertained by the Turkomans for the grinding and grasping rule of the Afghans is very clearly indicated by their proverb, quoted at p. 122, "Hilmi Uzbek, Zulmi Awghan"—Uzbek mildness, Afghan tyranny. "Of course," Professor Vambéry proceeds, "merciful Russia did not neglect to impart to these poor victims the idea of humanity and blessing with which the rule of the white Padishah is connected." Now, we have already heard that the Russians, through outrages on women, arbitrary seizure of cattle, and other Zulum, have lost no time in disgusting these splendid soldiers, to whom horse and arms are dearer than wife or child. They have already found that the Russian thumb is thicker than the Afghan's loins.

Not being in the confidence of the "authorities," we do not know what steps may have been taken by the Government of India to utilize this discontent for the purpose of organizing a rising, in case of necessity, in the Russian rear. Sooth to say, we are ill-matched against the Russ in the matter of intrigue. The British officer is—thank Heaven for it—not on the same level as a semi-Asiatic intriguer to whom lying is a natural utterance. Nevertheless, with the aid of such an officer as Patrick Stewart, who can live (p. 83) in Merv for three weeks without one of his countrymen being able to penetrate his disguise, some such endeavour might be successfully made. We entirely agree with Vambéry's remarks on this subject at p. 143.

We are both surprised and sorry to see that the Professor is rather inclined to throw cold water on the idea of instigating a rising in the Caucasus. He considers the tribes too utterly cowed by Russian tyranny. It was Palmerston's greatest blunder to have abandoned them to Russia after the Crimean war. With what hideous brutality they were all but exterminated is no secret, and the phrase, "In the Circassian style, if you please, gentlemen," has become a well-understood order in the Russian army, when any massacre of the defenceless on a more than usually enormous and atrocious scale is to be perpetrated. Yet even in this quarter something might be done. The first step is to re-establish the Consulate at Tiflis, abolished by the late Government directly on its accession to power, because, forsooth, it offended the delicate susceptibilities of "Holy" and massacring Russia.

We have already expressed, on more than one occasion, our views as to the importance of cultivating the friendship of Turkey; and these our Professor thoroughly endorses. Nor have we underrated the influence of the Sultan of Roum in India. "If," says Vambéry, "the gentlemen in Downing-street are not aware of the fact that Hindoo chiefs of Moslem faith are most anxious to pay their respects to the Sultan at Stamboul, I could gently whisper into their ears that there are always certain mollahs, dervishes, and sheiks, in the close proximity of the Sultan, who regularly undertake errands to Bombay, Calcutta, and Lahore, and who, returning from the distant East to the so-called Hind Tekesi (Indian convent) in Constantinople, are generally the bearers of such messages and interchanges of ideas as fully testify to the common cause of the two extreme links of Moslem society."

As regards Persia, our preponderance in which would enable us to cut the Russian communications by an army debouching from Persian territory, which the Russians now treat as their own, we have also expressed our opinion. Our author (pp. 58 and 142) traces the decline—may we not rather say the annihilation?—of our influence there to the time when, during the Russo-Persian war, which ended so disastrously for Persia, in her being compelled to sign the Treaty of Turkman-chai, Persia "was taught the lesson, that English assurances in times of anxiety, were of no great value in times of distress." At all events, it is clear that our influence has gone, and if ever we are to be anything in Teheran save "une quantité négligeable," we have to begin de novo to regain it.

It will be seen that, in the foregoing remarks, we have confined ourselves to a glance at the "cities of refuge," the points which show that there is yet balm in Gilead. For the weakness and vacillation of the late Government, which, beyond all preceding administrations, had perfected the art of "turning its back on itself," no one more deeply feels, or has more plainly expressed, the utmost detestation and contempt. But it is useless to cry over spilt milk. We shall not now get the Muscovite out of Penjdeh. It will be "all our work" to keep him out of Herat. And we think it better to point out the possible than to bewail the irrevocable.

We cannot help thinking—we gladly make Messrs. Cassell a present of the hint in acknowledgment of the pleasure we have derived from reading a most interesting book—that some, at least, of the information here contained might, advantageously both for readers and publishers, be put into something like pamphlet form. Conservative candidates would assuredly be wanting to themselves if they did not do their utmost to facilitate its dissemination.

THE DECISIVE BATTLES OF INDIA.*

This very interesting work, which deservedly attracted much attention on its first appearance, was fully noticed by us at the time. Colonel Malleon has now issued a second edition, containing an additional chapter, suggested to him, as he candidly tells us, by the Athenæum, and narrating the two sieges of Bhurtpoor. It is to this that we propose now to confine ourselves.

It was the disastrous retreat of Monson, in the face of a calculating and enterprising foe, Jeswant Ras Holkar, which indirectly led to the first siege of Bhurtpoor. That retreat had brought the Rajah to the conviction that there was, after all, not so very much fighting stuff in troops which had allowed themselves to be chased from the Indore boundary right up to the walls of Agra; and he had wholly thrown in his lot with the Holkar. It was desirable to make an example of him, and Lord Lake, after capturing Deeg, took up his ground early in January, 1855, in front of the Jat capital.

The position of the grand old fortress, once supposed to be wholly impregnable, and still renowned as the one place in India which has repelled a serious attack by British troops, familiar as it is to all who have seen Agra, is well and clearly described. Owing to insufficient preparations, the repeated gallant assaults on the strong fortifications of the town were baffled, and Lord Lake had to retire with a loss in killed and wounded of 3,100 men. But not till the brave and persistent old General had done his utmost with the means at his disposal. Ere he desisted, "his battering train had become unfit for service, not one 18-pounder shot remained for use, the supply of gunpowder was almost exhausted, provisions were scarce, and there were but few stores of any kind."

No wonder that, with this repulse, following so closely on Monson's disaster, "Bhurtpoor was," for the next twenty years, "a word to conjure with in the habitations of disaffected princes and nobles throughout the country. It required," adds our author, "the reversal of the result of the first siege to deprive that word of its efficacy and its sting."

The whirligig of time brings its revenges; and they came, as to Bhurtpoor, in 1825. Lord Combermere, the then Commander-in-Chief in India, came better prepared than his predecessor. With a force, including five European Regiments, of 27,000 men, fifty-two pieces of artillery, and a battering train of 102 guns, he thought himself in a position to crack the hard nut, although the garrison numbered nearly as many men as his own force. He seems, too, to have been but half-heartedly opposed, owing in part, it would appear, to a prophecy, that Bhurtpoor would only fall when a Kumbhir—an alligator—as the General's name was pronounced, should dry up the ditch.

* "The Decisive Battles of India, from 1746 to 1849 inclusive," with portrait of author, map, and four plans. Second Edition, with an additional chapter. By Colonel G. B. Malleon, C.S.I. W. H. Allen and Co., 1885.

His scheme of operations, namely, to attack at a point where the ditch was dry, where there were no flanking works, and where, though "their heaviest artillery fire could be concentrated on assailants at a distance, it could not touch those who should approach close to the ditch," is made perfectly intelligible by a plan of the fortress and its citadel, which faces p. 326, and which, perhaps, might as well have found a place on a page (say 316) in the narrative of the first siege.

The details of the attack are vividly—even for Colonel Malleon—put before the reader, and we consider the chapter one of the most successful in a work which, more than almost any book with which we are acquainted, has the charm of combining with professional accuracy a fluency of narrative which rivets the attention of the general reader.

With reference to our review of Colonel Malleon's "Ambushes and Surprises," in which we referred at some length to Lord Mark Kerr's encounter with the rebel Sepoys when on his way from Benares to relieve Azamghur, we have received a note from Lord Mark, to the chief passages of which we readily give insertion, being glad that our readers should have the account of the affair in the words of the chief actor in it.

Lord Mark says:—"What occurred was this. I rode a half-mile or less ahead of my column with a cavalry escort, formed as an advance guard, just before sunrise and with a bright moon. Presently the glittering of bayonets was seen in the fences and behind trees on one side of the road, perhaps fifty yards from the road. I pretended not to see them, made my escort dismount, and waited for the infantry (who had loaded, muzzle-loaded, in case of accidents). The enemy didn't think I had seen them. It was a risk of my life and that of the escort, but less dangerous than any other course. As the infantry came up, the cavalry, Queen's Bays, mounted and moved towards the rear, and I doubled out a company in extended order, and fired right into the glistening row of bayonets. Then came a fire from front, rear, and flanks. The Sepoys did cross the road, and set fire to the baggage-carts—two miles in length—the drivers bolted. In an hour and a-half only was it finished, and all the baggage saved, and the garrison relieved.

ARE WE TO LET RUSSIA OCCUPY HERAT?

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I have read with interest the articles and reviews which have lately appeared in your paper regarding Herat. You enforce, as so many have previously done, the argument that Herat and its vicinity can be made an inexhaustible fount of supply—an independent basis, in fact—for a Russian army of say 150,000 men, who would otherwise have no nearer base than the Caspian. Granted: Vambéry says so, and his authority may be accepted. But, Sir, may I not ask, why what is sauce for the Russian goose may not also be sauce for the British gander? If it be true that every article of food, that every ingredient of gunpowder, that iron—convertible into steel for cannon, &c.—abound in the Herat country sufficiently for an army of 150,000 Russians, 600 miles from the Caspian, do not object to my inquiring whether the same facilities might not serve an English army of a quarter that strength at the same distance from the Indus? We used—before the days of arms of precision it is true—to say that one Englishman was equal to three Frenchmen, and we proved at Inkerman how many Russians—though intoxicated with vodka or some similar abomination—an Englishman equalled. Why, then, this stupid talk about having no base if we occupy Herat? The place itself is a base. Occupy it, of course with the Ameer's consent, if possible, but occupy it. Quocunque modo, rem.—
Yours faithfully,

EAST INDIA UNCLAIMED STOCKS ACT, 1885.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—The principal object of this important Act is to transfer to the Government of India all unclaimed stocks and dividends und dealt with for ten years and upwards.

It seems a convenient opportunity to draw the attention of your readers to the fact, that there is no provision in the Act for advertising the names and descriptions of the stockholders entitled to the unclaimed stock and dividends so transferred, although it is provided that when a claimant appears he is to advertise for further claimants in such newspapers as the Bank of England or Ireland may direct.

I venture to suggest that the list should be issued as a Parliamentary paper, and advertised in English and Indian newspapers likely to be seen by the stockholders or their representatives, otherwise the public will have no knowledge as to the amount of the "windfall" accruing to the National Exchequer under this Act. The public should also be allowed to consult the list at the India Office on payment of a small fee, as they can now do the wills or letters of administration relating to the estates of persons dying in India.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

SYDNEY H. PRESTON.

OPIUM.

OUR Indian readers, enjoying their siesta at the seaside or in Switzerland, will doubtless find themselves sufficiently disposed for the proverbial forty winks without having so soporific a subject as opium obtruded on them. But it is a subject of such vast importance to our Indian revenue that it well deserves a few minutes' attention.

A Blue-book of seventeen pages, issued this month, (China, No. 3, 1885), deals with the negotiations which have recently been brought to a close between Lord Granville, (and subsequently, by Lord Salisbury), on our own side, and the Marquis Tsêng, the Chinese representative in England, "respecting the duties on opium in China."

By the Treaty of Tientsin, concluded after the joint occupation by English and French forces of Peking, it was provided that the Chinese Government should be at liberty to take, for the protection of their revenue, whatever measures (p. 8) they might think fit to adopt. The arrangements which have hitherto been in force have been the levy of 30 taels (about £9 10s.) as import duty per chest. There was a further charge, under the head of li-kin, analogous to an octroi and transit duty combined, of more than twice the above sum; this latter varied in nearly every province, being sometimes treble the customs or import duty.

When we consider that China imports from India opium to the value of eight millions sterling, it may be imagined that the uncertainty of the total amount which any particular parcel of opium would have to pay was a very serious matter, and the object of the late negotiations was the absolute abolition of this li-kin or octroi (originally, like our own income tax, a war duty, but, like it also, a great source of revenue in time of peace), except at the custom house, where it should be levied at a fixed and uniform rate, along with the import duty, and then the opium should be free from all further import.

The great advantages, of simplicity and of freedom from petty exactions and annoyances while goods were in transit, to be secured by the adoption of this system, were readily recognised by both sides; and after one or two preliminary conferences (the India Office being represented by Mr. Pedder, the Revenue Secretary) had been held at the Foreign Office, the Chinese expressed their willingness formally to accept the change; though in consenting to it their act "would be in the direction of a voluntary restriction of their power of unlimited taxation, and a concession they had made to commerce rather than one they had received."

The amount at which the Chinese Government proposed to fix the li-kin was eighty taels (or about £28 10s.), and their Envoy maintained that this was, from the Celestial point of view, an exceedingly moderate sum for which to compromise an undoubted right. "It can," he urged, "scarcely be contended that, considering the exceptionable nature of the opium traffic, and the duties which in other countries are frequently levied on articles on the consumption of which it is much less incumbent on a Government to keep a check, that 25 per cent., or the rate which the imports and li-kin duties now asked for would amount to, would be otherwise than extremely moderate. His Government," he added, "desired that it should be borne in mind that the amount for which the Chinese Government is prepared to commute the transit duties on opium is now levied at some of the ports, whilst it is actually exceeded at others. At Tamsuy and Kelung, for example, the li-kin amounts to eighty taels, at Foochow to eighty-six taels, and at Wenchow to from eighty to ninety taels; thus confirming the opinion of Sir Robert Hart, a very high authority on such matters, that the li-kin on opium might be raised to ninety taels per chest without interfering with the consumption of the drug.

Lord Granville, then Foreign Secretary, desired to have the li-kin fixed at seventy, instead of at eighty, taels, but deferred to Marquis Tsêng's representations, and, on the 9th of February, wrote to His Excellency that the British Government "have resolved, in deference to the wishes of the Chinese Government, to agree that the rate of commutation of li-kin shall be fixed at eighty taels. They have been mainly induced to consent to an arrangement, which may entail a considerable loss of revenue on India, by the assurances which the Chinese Minister has given them that the Chinese Government will feel morally bound by the consideration that the arrangement has been proposed by themselves; that they believe that it will harmonise with existing institutions, and that they will endeavour to execute it in such a manner as to show that a fair agreement drawn up in conformity with the conditions of the country will be advantageous to foreign trade."

There remained the task of framing the clause, additional to the Chefoo Agreement, in which the arrangement, just arrived at, was to be embodied; and the precise form of permit which was to ensure the opium, after paying its considerable contribution to the Imperial Exchequer, reaching the consumer without the levy of any further local impost, such as those to which the China-grown drug is subject; and in these matters it is satisfactory to note that the Chinese Government have met the requirements addressed to them in an apparently candid and conciliatory spirit, while the provision whereby Her Majesty's Government desire that the agreement should contain a clause giving them the right to terminate the arrangement at any time if the internal li-kin upon opium be not effectively abolished, and that this right shall not depend upon the consent of other Treaty Powers who may have joined in the arrangement, is pretty certain to act directly in ensuring its being properly carried out.

Some little time will doubtless elapse ere the effect on Indian interests of the working of the new plan, which comes into operation early next year, can be even approximately estimated, but there seems good reason to hope, that freedom from petty restrictions and arbitrary exactions will, in the matter of opium as of all other branches of commerce, lead to a considerable increase of consumption, and, consequently, of the cultivation necessary for the production of the augmented supply which will be required.

CALCUTTA AS IT WAS.

"As you were!" once said a drill-sergeant to a batch of recruits on their first training to become food for powder. Said recruits instantly assumed miscellaneous attitudes. "Confound you," exclaimed the sergeant (unless fame belie him, "he really said a big, big D,") "I didn't mean as you were, but as you was afore you were."

Now Mr. Long has, in the two last numbers of the Journal of the National Indian Association, given us an idea of Calcutta "as it was afore it were," in a very pleasant, simple style. As to Indian society as it was a few years later, the Calcutta Gazette, of which the Government of India long since published a somewhat imperfectly edited selection, give us a fair idea of the early Britishers who shook the Pagoda-tree.

But Mr. Long goes, as it were, into "the hoary ages of antiquity," and a good many readers, who well know such parts of Calcutta as an Englishman's nose permits him to inspect, and whose interest in the old place, never quite dead, the recent earthquake has stimulated, may not be sorry to have it brought before them what manner of place Calcutta—then Chuttanutte—was in the seventeenth century, when the palaces of Chowringhee—so lately threatened with the fate of those of Lisbon in 1755—had never been designed, and when Government House was probably represented by the lair of the king of beasts.

We begin, then, with a chance purchase, no other than the original MS. diary of Sir W. Hedges, who, being sent out by the Court of Directors as Agent and Governor for their affairs in the Bay of Bengal, left England in 1681, arriving opposite the site of the City of Palaces in July, 1682. Hedges, who seems to have been an enterprising traveller, returned home, after two years' stay, through Persia, the journey occupying two and a quarter years.

He must have found his charge a very sleepy hollow of dulness. Factory life was two hours' work a day, and quarrelling or sleeping the rest of the twenty-four hours. The Bengalees seem to have been sat upon without mercy, and the Moslems are reported to have been adepts in the art of extorting money by "slippering (beating on the soles of the feet), chambucking (whipping), and drubbing till the party could not speak."

It was not for want of care on the part of the Court in the selection of their servants, nor for lack of good and godly precepts, that things went so badly. They resolved not to employ "gentlemen" (roysterers, that is, according to Mr. Long's probable explanation), and they sent out good books. Masulipatam possessed seventy-three volumes, "chiefly ponderous tomes of divinity." It is amusing to find the Court writing, in 1670, to Fort St. George, "We send you copies of two useful treatises lately extant, one touching the existence of God, the other against Popery."

The intercommunication between the factories was slow, and roundabout enough. "Despatches from Calcutta to Surat took two months in the transit overland. . . . When at sea a shot or piece of lead was to be attached to the packets, which were to be thrown overboard should any enemy take the ship."

Candles were allowed to the chiefs of Council, to the chaplain and the surgeon; and there is another occasion for their use, as we find Mr. Thorowgood directed "to manage the Company's candle at the sale;" an order referring, says Mr. Long, to the long since obsolete "practice of auctioneering things by inch of candle." The exercise of economy was very strictly, and even sternly, inculcated, and that, too, on festive occasions. "You are to forbear," wrote the Court in 1677, "firing of guns on frivolous occasions and at drinking of healths, for our powder will be better bestowed on our enemies." Even English paper was a rarity.

Considering what a great person a member of the Viceroy's Council now is, it is funny to read the following order, signed, in 1690, by Charnock and all the members of his Council: "Pray send back by the boat 10 rupis worth of geese and 10 rupis worth of large fowls." A year or two before that date there were no scissors, penknives, or knives to be had in Calcutta. "The New Fort" of Calcutta was built in 1758 on the site of "a large village surrounded by a tiger jungle."

We may be sure that cholera was a regular visitant, and we find a confirmation of this in the fact that "one of the earliest buildings in Calcutta was the image of Ula uta Devi, or the goddess of cholera, erected by an English merchant (Duncan), about 1720, to please his Hindu friends. Crowds of Hindus used to frequent it to present offerings to propitiate the Deity." This seems to have been about the only remedy, for, though at the end of the seventeenth century there were four English doctors in Calcutta, they had few tools to work with. "No physick in the Company's stores," so runs an entry in 1699—"and, many being indisposed, a small chest was bought of Dr. Damers for Rs. 100." At Masulipatam, some years previously, the surgeon offered to cure two wounded servants of the Company "if they will pay for the medicines, as there being none of the Company's for a long time past."

Whatever there may have been to defend, not much care seems, in those days, to have been taken to defend it. There were but one hundred men ("pitiful wretches," was the description of those at Surat, "that dare not look an enemy in the face,") "and an officer," said the Calcutta Government, "that can't say bho to a goose."

From the military the transition to the fair sex is a natural one enough. "English women," says Mr. Long, "two centuries ago were in India few and far between." His selections of passages relating to them, though taken from Western India, are doubtless equally applicable to the Calcutta of the period. The Company wrote to Surat in 1675: "The women we sent out last year are of a better rank than we expected. If they behave not themselves well, send them back, as you do the men." Again: "Twelve women have been sent to Bombay for wives of our soldiers. We have tried to get some country girls, but failed." Bombay thus acknowledges receipt of a previous batch of "young persons;" "Many women came out in this year's shipping, whom they hope to dispose of to ease the Company's charges. They desire none may be sent out but of good fame."

With this somewhat business-like allusion to the fair sex, we must for the present take our leave of India as it was 200 years ago. We look forward to the Hakluyt Society's promised publication on the subject.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attract universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pure and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C.
BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff)
DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLO-RODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE IN-VENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr.
Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.
DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that has occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO. Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

CHLORODYNE IS THE TRUE
PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER,
TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep, WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, AUGUST 31, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, August 11th; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, August 9th.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times, telegraphing yesterday, states as follows:—

Recent telegrams from home seem to show that the frontier difficulty is settled, at least for a time. In India, however, no one believes in the permanence of the settlement, and the conviction is strong and general that the crisis has only been postponed, and that Russia will seize the first favourable opportunity to renew her encroachments. The news which has recently been received that she is hurrying on railways and roads from the Tejed to Merv, and from Merv towards the Oxus, points to her determination to strengthen herself for the next forward movement, and to the absolute necessity on our part of not relaxing our efforts to prepare for the inevitable struggle. Lord Dufferin's Government may be trusted not to lose sight of this supreme necessity, and it is fervently to be hoped that the British public will not allow the excitement of the general election or the details of party struggles, to divert attention from matters which are of the greatest moment to our Indian Empire.

The Ameer, if the latest reports be true, is pushing forward his preparations with increased vigour. He is said to have abandoned the design of enlarging the palace at Cabul, and to have devoted the money intended for that purpose, nearly three lakhs of rupees, to military works, including three ammunition depôts and new barracks for 2,000 infantry at Herat. It is also stated that two redoubts are to be erected at Maimana, and a new fort, with a revolving tower, at Tirpul. The Calcutta Englishman is responsible for a story which represents the Ameer in a new light that of exceptional humility—namely, that he has posted in the mosques of Cabul notices inviting the prayers of the faithful for the Ameer, Lord Dufferin, and the Vice-Ameer, Abdurrahman.

A rumour, apparently well authenticated, comes from Herat that the Governor has lately shown some discourtesy towards Sir J. Ridgeway. He is said to have taken offence at the refusal of the British Commissioner to supply some money for which he asked. Then, fearing that his behaviour might be reported, he stopped the post from the camp of the Commission, opened some of the letters, and had them translated to him. The Boundary Commission, on the date of the last news, was at the Sangbust frontier. All was quiet.

HE also warmly presses on the Government the necessity of more activity being shown as to maritime defence. Years will be required to perfect the defences, though things are a little better than they were some months ago, when, "had war with Russia broken out, Russian cruisers might have scoured the Indian seas with impunity for some weeks and captured many merchant vessels, thereby dealing a severe blow to the commerce of the country, and what was possible then will continue to be possible till remedial measures are taken. The best means of providing against such an emergency would appear to consist in the revival of the Indian Navy, a project which has been discussed for years, but never carried into effect. The matter is one which especially affects the mercantile community of England and India, and if they are alive to their interests they will lose no time in pressing it upon the attention of the Government." It will be noticed how entirely this view is in accordance with that which we expressed some weeks ago in pointing out the folly of abolishing the Indian Navy.

It is said that the Duke of Connaught is to have the Bombay command, should it not be abolished. The appointment would be popular.

SIR C. M. M'GREGOR succeeds to the command of the Punjab Frontier Field Force. No better selection could have been made.

WE are well pleased to see that the well-known Pundit "A. K." has received some recognition of his arduous and distinguished services. Why not have given him the C.I.E., an order specially instituted to reward services differing in their nature from those for which the other Orders are considered appropriate rewards?

The Government has conferred the title of Rai Bahadur and a grant in perpetuity of a rent free village in Oude on Pundit Kishen Singh Milwal, an employé of the Survey Department, who has probably done more than any living man to increase our knowledge of Thibet, and the story of whose explorations has been published under the initials "A. K.", which are familiar to all geographers.

MANY of the Anglo-Indian journals continue to comment on the facts, not only that Lord Kimberley "left to its operation" the Bengal Tenancy Act, but that he did so in a despatch dated the day before he resigned office, thus precluding his successor from having the chance of expressing an opinion on the subject. It assuredly was "bad form," but we are not aware that any human being had reason to expect "good form," in other words, gentlemanly conduct, from any one member of the late Cabinet. Is it to be supposed that these things are left out of account in the estimate at which influential Natives rate our national character?

THE trade between Singapur and Bangkok has latterly so much increased that it is proposed to run a weekly instead of a fortnightly line of steamers between the two ports.

As might have been expected, the Service papers have a good deal to say against the proposed reorganisation of the Indian Army. It is generally believed that this will take place on the lines laid down by the Commission of 1879, appointed, it will be remembered, by the present Premier while Secretary of State for India. Of that Commission Sir F. Roberts was a member, and his visit to England, on the eve of his nomination as Commander-in-Chief in India, is significant in this connection.

WE have more than once dwelt on the importance of taking the first opportunity to utilise the military spirit of our Native fellow-subjects. For the following remarks on the topic we are indebted to the Broad Arrow. We fear there is but too much truth in the remarks, quoted from the Times of India, that in England little or nothing is really known of the Native Army:—

Native officers are as a body, a set of brave, loyal, and devoted men, who when in cantonments perform their duties in a quiet, orderly, thorough manner, and when in the field give their lives as freely for England as if they were Englishmen born and bred. They take a pride in their profession, and they are zealous and valuable servants of the State. But when people talk glibly about officerising the Native Army by giving direct commissions to the native aristocracy, they forget one thing. The present system of promoting jemadars and subadars from the ranks, though not perfect, has this advantage. It helps to keep the Native Army contented and hopeful. A Native battalion is like a republic, in which each man has a chance of rising to the top. The Indian Army, as at present constituted, affords an honourable and reasonably adventurous career for the many. The hasty and injudicious reformers would turn it into a hunting-ground for the few. If promotion from the ranks were stopped, the great mass of our Native soldiery would become discontented and hopeless, and we need not dwell on the dangers that would arise from such a deplorable condition of things. The present organisation of the Native Army is wise and politic and not lightly to be disturbed or tampered with. The problem is not how to develop any possible military talent that may be latent in the Indian aristocracy, it is how to make the profession of arms attractive to the warlike races of this country. It is absurd to suppose that this will be done by wholesale throwing open of commissions in the Native Army to the chiefs and gentry of India. There is a certain flashy attractiveness about the idea, but from the very nature and constitution of the Native Army, it is not feasible. To abolish the present system of promotion from the ranks in favour of direct commissions would be a fatal mistake. To give one or two direct commissions in each Native regiment is another thing, and would do no harm, perhaps good. But this ought to be the limit. In fact, in this and in all other matters seriously affecting the Native Army, extreme caution ought to be used. The Times of India appropriately remarks, "If those in authority wish to benefit the Indian Army, they are many means of doing so in a quiet way. For instance, give the Victoria Cross to Native soldiers on the same terms as it is granted to their British comrades. This boon would be highly appreciated, for no troops in the world show greater valour in action or are more keenly alive to the legitimate rewards of valour than the Sepoys of the Indian Army. The number of members of the Order of British India might be increased, and there are other ways of making the service more popular which we have not time to go into now. But we sincerely trust that the nonsense we have felt it our duty to expose will not be taken seriously even in England, where little or nothing is really known about the Native Army. In India, of course, it will only be laughed at."

ON another branch of the same subject the Army and Navy Gazette observes:—

It is most essential to its efficiency that the Native Army should be officered by active and comparatively young men; and as in this case it can be done with economy to the State, the matter should be taken up without further delay. The present pensions of £571 after twenty-eight years' service, and £783 after thirty-two years' service, are not sufficient inducement for officers to retire who become entitled to £1,124 after thirty-eight years' service, and who, moreover, have to give up their widow's claim on a pension from Lord Clive's Fund of £114 1s. 3d., should they retire upon the above pensions, instead of holding on for the colonel's allowances. On attaining fifty-two years of age officers are debarred from holding regimental appointments, but can remain on in India, drawing nearly £1,000 a year for doing nothing, until they become entitled to £1,124, so that Government can afford to be generous, and still be on the right side in the matter of economy, to say nothing of efficiency. According to the rules at present in force, Government seem to be doing all they can to induce officers to hold on for the larger pensions. Efficiency, however, is the main point, and no army in the world can be considered efficient that has so many old officers serving in its ranks as there are in the Native Army of India.

THE Pioneer tells us that orders have been recently sent home for large quantities of rolling-stock, girders, and material for the Peshin plateau line, and the extension from Shebo to the foot of the Khojak is now being thoroughly surveyed. It appears not improbable that the Amran range will have to be pierced by a tunnel, as the gradients are found to be very steep on both sides. We really "want to know, you know," why these orders were not given, and the necessity for a tunnel found out, long since.

The subjoined, for the reproduction of which space failed us last week, furnishes matter for profitable, if not for agreeable, reflection; it is not the less suggestive that it appears in the "official" Pioneer:—

Though, as we have shown before, the Russian statement that the Hazaras and Jamshidis had expressed their willingness to become subjects of the Czar, was in its entirety too preposterous, it may have had a certain substratum of truth. The Hazaras and Jamshidis are for the most part pastoral races, spending the summer with their flocks in the hills, and returning to the plains in the winter. Some of these, as may be seen from the letter of our Correspondent with the Boundary Commission, are to be found in the summer months, sprinkled with their flocks over the hills that form the southern margin of the "debateable" zone, now conceded to Russia. In the winter they return to their homes around Kila-nau, and across the Murghab. It may well be, therefore, that some of these wanderers, who have come in contact with the Russian outposts, and have been told that the pastures upon which their flocks were grazing were now Russian territory, may have expressed their willingness to remain as peaceable subjects of the Czar. Just in the same way those other Hazaras and Jamshidis, near whose villages our Boundary Commission has been encamped, have been full of loyalty to the Amir. Which will prove the more abiding sentiment belongs to the future; but no doubt many of them, returning in winter from their scattered summer grazings to common homes in the plains of the Murghab, will have opportunity to compare notes. The Saruk Turkomans of Panjdeh, it must not be forgotten, also "expressed loyalty to the Czar" in their welcome to the Russians, according to General Komaroff; but the Saruk Turkomans of Panjdeh are already so disgusted with their new masters as to meditate migration southwards en masse. The same very natural revulsion of feeling may come over the Hazaras and Jamshidis, and their summer pastures in the new Russian territory may know them no more. As matters stand, however, the wandering habits of these tribes threaten to permanently disturb the projected settlement of the Afghan frontier. With subjects who for six months of the year profess allegiance to the Czar, it would be impossible for the Amir to keep clear of frontier complications; and M. Lessar's ethnographical argument would not long be allowed to rust for want of use. With Hazaras dwelling on Russian territory, it would soon be as clear as daylight to every St. Petersburg politician that the whole of the Hazara-jat from Bala Murghab to Kabul belonged of right to Russia.

THE Ceylon people seem a good deal troubled that it is Trincomalie, and not Colombo, that the Government proposes to select as a "fortified coaling-station." The Ceylon Times urges:—

Surely it is time that public action was taken in this matter, and the Home Government was urged to consider the advisability of making Colombo the chief naval station. The stock of coal which the Imperial Government are anxious to protect is incomparably greater here than at Trincomalie, and we do not suppose a hostile fleet would find the Government article very much superior to that belonging to our merchants in Colombo, particularly if the former was strongly protected and the latter hardly at all.

WE regret to see it stated that cholera prevails in Nipal to an extent which has caused a panic among the people, who, however, seem gladly to avail themselves of the medical aid proffered by the Residency and the Durbar surgeons.

FOR some mails past no very encouraging accounts have been given of the progress of the Sukkur Rohri bridge. We have already pointed out that its existence might make all the difference between abundance and starvation to any considerable force which it may be necessary to throw forward; so long, that is, as we look on the Indus as our base. The adoption of the suggestion of our correspondent, "M. R." in last week's issue, that if Herat be, as is admitted, a base in itself, it is better that it should be one for us than for Russia, and that we should forthwith occupy it, is, all difficulties notwithstanding, probably the true solution of the Afghan difficulty.

THE Kandaharees, while we were holding their town, took à merveille to our rupees; and they are Afghans, who, according to the do-nothing people, hate us. The Heratis are not Afghans, and have no even ostensible reason to "abhor" us. And that they know how to "collar" our rupees, without the least semblance of dislike, the members of the Afghan Boundary Commission know to their cost.

WE excerpt from the Pioneer the following remarks, with which we heartily agree:—

In an article entitled "The Governor of Panjdeh" the Najmul-Akbar shows how shrewdly Russia estimates the Asiatic mind. Because it is reported that a local headman, one Sarkh Botan, has been appointed Governor of Panjdeh, our esteemed contemporary at once applauds the generous impartiality of victorious Russia. That is exactly what Russia intended that papers like the Najmul-Akbar in India, and the gossips of Afghanistan and Persia, should be led to say. Russia has a game to play in Central Asia and Afghanistan, which requires that short-sighted native politicians should be on her side. Panjdeh is not altogether hers even yet, and each new morsel of territory must be carefully buttered before it can be satisfactorily swallowed. When the period of digestion and incorporation with the body of the Russian Empire arrives for Panjdeh, another story will have to be told. In appointing a local headman to the post of nominal governor, for Sarkh Botan is really the slave of any Russian officer who comes that way, General Komaroff only did what was best for the Russian cause. Even as it is, the population can scarcely be prevented from emigrating southwards en masse. With a Russian governor nothing would have prevented them; and where would the "ethnographical argument" have been then? Russia must, if she can, play off one party in North-West Afghanistan against the other.

THE latest news from the Boundary Commission shows that the journey to the south of Herat is being quietly made. The heat is reported to be great at the camping grounds in the valley.

It is notified that in the calendar year 1886 54,000 chests of Bengal opium will be offered for sale, namely, 4,500 chests each month. Of these 4,500 chests 2,350 will consist of Patna and 2,150 of Benares opium.

REUTER has received from Teheran, under date August 25, the following items:—

Intelligence from Merv announces that three battalions of Russian infantry, 700 cavalry, and eight guns left that place for Penjdeh at the end of last month.

A letter from Herat states that some houses in that town have been purchased on British account. A sum of £40,000 reached Herat at the end of last month. Four thousand labourers are employed on the fortifications, which are progressing rapidly.

The approaches to the town are being considerably improved, and the construction of the forts has commenced at Kuchan.

THE Delhi Gazette hears from Bengal that the indigo prospects are not so good as they were. The heavy rain has checked the growth of the plant, which is small and stunted, and, owing to the lateness of the season, but little improvement can be expected. Owing to the rising of the rivers, some of the concerns have had to cut unripe plant. In Midnapur the plant has also suffered much from the heavy rains. Manufacture is general everywhere, and the vat produce is fair. The accounts from Behar vary according to the quantity of rain that has fallen. In some concerns, where the rain has been heavy, the plant is still backward, and the season is fully three weeks later than usual. In other concerns, which have been favoured with some fine, sunshiny weather, the plant has much improved. It seems doubtful, however, whether the Khoonties will be able to grow to any size this season. Manufacture, except in parts of Chumparan, has been everywhere commenced; and though the biyah produce is bad, the vat produce is fair. In the north-west heavy rains and floods have caused serious damage to the sewings, and the prospects not being nearly so good as they were a fortnight ago.

THE same paper tells us that one of the great objections of the Thibetans to bringing their produce into the Darjeeling district has attracted the attention of Government, and is likely to be removed. A block of 250 acres of camping and grazing land, in close proximity to the Kalimpong Bazaar, has lately been set apart for the use of these traders, and it can only be hoped that this concession, while it leads to an increase of our import trade, will also materially benefit the export of goods manufactured in the district; of which tea may be named as a not unimportant item.

THE Countess of Dufferin has taken to the study of Hindustani, evidently in order that she might be able to converse with the people, and Native ladies especially, in their own vernacular. "We were going," says the Liberal, "to suggest, if Hindustani, why not Bengali? But this would be too much for her Ladyship. The desire itself is noble, and ought to stimulate others in following the example. No doubt Hindustani is the language of the princes of Upper India, and to a Lady in her position the acquirement of that language would be an invaluable gain. We believe this is the first time that the wife of a Viceroy has thought of communicating with the people through their own vernacular. Her condescension is beyond praise, and the political effect of the step will be incalculable. All praise to Lady Dufferin! May her shadow never grow less!

Chit Chat.

JUSTICE is always supposed to be wanting in humour; but there are exceptions. In India an assistant magistrate of Aligarh once delivered the following immortal judgment:—

"Pachua is hereby charged with having, on the 11th January, followed the court on its rising, and while said court was in the act of mounting its buggy, came from behind, and seizing the court's dangling leg, the other foot being on the step, forcibly pulled back the court, frightened the horse, and nearly caused an accident. The reason alleged for this by accused is that he wanted to hear the result of an application of his. The practice by petitioners of pulling the courts by the legs is one which should be discouraged. Accused only says he is a poor man, admitting the truth of the complaint. He is sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment."

HERE, too, is another picture where humour is assuredly not conspicuous for its absence:—

Magistrate to Prosecutor: "Well, sir, what have you to say?"

Prosecutor: "Please, your High Mightiness, the prisoner stole my goose."

Magistrate to Witness: "What have you to say?"

Witness: "Please, your High Mightiness, I saw the prisoner steal the goose."

Magistrate to Prisoner: "And what have you say?"

Prisoner: "Please, your High Mightiness, I did not steal the goose."

Magistrate to Prisoner: "A fortnight's imprisonment for stealing the goose." To Prosecutor: "A fortnight's imprisonment for not looking after your goose." To Witness: "A fortnight's imprisonment for not minding your own business."

It is difficult to say what constitutes beauty in women. The Sandwich Islanders estimate women by their weight. The Chinese require them to have deformed feet and black teeth. A girl must be tattooed sky-blue and wear a nose ring to satisfy a South Sea Islander. African princes require their brides to have their teeth filed like those of a saw; and thus goes the world, the criterion of beauty differing according to latitude and longitude.

THE disputes in Thana in regard to forest rights may or may not be justifiable: but why, oh! why, are the lawyers in the district so anxious in the matter. Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes.

AT Rangoon there are so many lawyers and so little business that fees have fallen to an enormous extent. Good news for suitors.

A MEMBER of the medical profession in Bengal lately indented for a "moveable screen." This was duly supplied at a cost of Rs. 180 (£18). What he wanted was a "folding screen" (according to the parlance of the P.W.D.), value Rs. 10 (£1); he pleaded that he used the term "moveable" in its common sense. The infuriated official to whom the indent was addressed pleaded (probably with truth) that he knew nothing about common sense, but confined himself to "official" phraseology; but mark the result—over Rs. 200 (£20) "worth of stationery, postage stamps, and official time" was consumed in settling this mighty important event.

INDIA has invented a new pleasure for boys. Get two rams, set them thirty yards apart, with their heads towards each other; then slap their sides, shout, and as they rush along jump upon their backs and grip their wool for dear life. The result may be that both lads are stunned by the concussion, or a piece of horn may, perchance, find its way into some tender part of the human frame. If not, start afresh, and continue operations till the desired result is attained.

A SHEPHERD, finding himself in trouble owing to his propensity for having a "wee drop," bethought himself of the happy expedient of stealing one of the sheep belonging to his former master and inoculating it with small-pox. The revenge was, indeed, terrible!—50 per cent. of the flock were swept away by the foul disease, and of those which survived, the mangy, woolless appearance was fatal to any hope of their ever becoming mutton!

THE world is beginning to find out—very tardily, it must be confessed—that the result of the theoretical cramming for the army is that the country's defenders are rapidly becoming thinking instead of fighting men. Yet many people love to have it so.

It is stated by a writer in the Pioneer that the Eastern Bengal State Railway is allowed to carry goods in competition with the Inland Flotilla Company at less than two-thirds of the actual cost, and to draw on the resources of Government for their losses. This is incredible.

A POONA paper tells a story that a native lad was grazing his cattle in Khandesh, when a panther suddenly appeared and purloined a cow. The brave boy, however, objecting to this act of spoliation, commenced to throw stones at the intruder, who, in turn, became enraged, and, leaving his spoil, seized his assailant. A shepherd in an adjoining field, seeing the boy's danger, ran to his assistance, and, wrapping one hand round with some cloths, thrust it in the jaws of the panther, while with the other he forced the beast to open its mouth and free the captive. This done, he directed the lad to brain the animal with stones till he died! The story has an air of suspicion, but it reads well.

THE Madras Times is responsible for the somewhat extraordinary statement that in the Madras Small Cause Court the judge—a native—being at a loss to decide as to the precise amount due to a certain plaintiff, hit upon the happy expedient of deciding the matter by lots! But surely, if justice is to depend upon the cast of a die, the expense of litigation might be saved. Everyone could, in such case, in verily and truth, become his own lawyer.

THE Right Rev. Bishop Sargent has recently celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his missionary labour in Tinnevely. Though on the shady side of seventy-five he is still hale and hearty. Yet we are told India is the land of death.

In the good old times, when "George the Fourth was King," people had a craze for epitaphs. The fashion has passed—and well it may, if the following sample be considered a fitting tribute to find a place in "God's acre":—

"Beneath this stone old Andrew lies;
Nobody laughs and nobody cries.
Where he's gone, and how he fare,
Nobody knows and nobody cares."

GLENAVERIL; OR, THE METAMORPHOSES.*

"Somewhere in a lone retreat
Of the Black Forest"

The wife of Glenaveril's Lord chanced to stay awhile with the widow of a Lutheran pastor. The "Countess fair," and "the lone human sister at her side," had a common bond of sympathy,

"The burdened bliss of coming motherhood";
but destiny had singled out for each a far different fate.

"Sister, embrace thy son!" the lady cried,
And held the infant to the mother's breast;
The dying mother, wanly smiling, eyed
Her little orphan. Gratefully she pressed
The hand of Eleanor, and faintly sighed:
"Poor babe! 'Twill be an unwelcome guest
In its dead father's home when I am gone!
My life is ebbing fast. God's will be done!"

But ere yet the sun had set an accident on the mountains had occurred, and

"Glenaveril's body laid
A lifeless horror in the hall!"

The shock to the young wife as, almost lifeless, she fell on the body of her scarce cold husband, was well-nigh fatal, but

"Death's gorged maw has lost its gluttonous zest," and yet another infant guest claimed the hospitality of the cottage in the forest.

It had been the wish of the wife of Glenaveril's Lord to take "Back to the vast domains, whose Lord was now the two children whom Fate had thus ushered into life with such singularity of circumstance, but a maiden aunt of adamant resolution refused to yield her brother's son to the seductions of wealth and station. The children parted—Ivor grew up on his estates in England, while Emanuel pursued his studies at Stuttgart.

A cradled infant,"

"But o'er the separated friends he still,
His fatherly, tho' distant, watch maintained."

Thus writes the poet of Edelrath, a German man of letters, whom similarity of tastes had linked in harmony of thought with the fated nobleman, whose memory he cherished, and whose nobility of character he admired.

Thus passed thirteen years, till

"Glenaveril's Countess slept
Once more by him whose love her life had wept," and Edelrath became sole guardian of the infant Earl. But the hand of Time is ever on the move. Manhood had arrived, and the change of scene is ushered in with a magnificent apostrophe:—

"O, youth! O, childhood! fugitive angels you,
That once gone back to Heaven, return no more!
In vain our hearts invoke you to renew
The joys that followed you; in vain implore
The bounty of a single bead of dew
That perished with you from our paths before
We knew you gone. The only dew that wets
Those pathways now, falls there from vain regrets."

Ivor took his seat as a peer in the House of Lords—a circumstance which enables the poet to give some masterly sketches of the leading members of that august assembly. Glenaveril, too, loved at times to wander to the "other place" where

"Savage foemen fight,
Their barbarous battles all the livelong night," and notabilities of the Lower Chamber are portrayed with scathing severity.

But the fray seemed to the youthful Lord of Glenaveril

"One vast display of wasted power and passion Misapplied!"

and, after a while, quitting England, he bent his steps towards Heidelberg to meet Emanuel, now a graduate in theology in that seat of learning. There, at Ivor's request, they plighted their vows that at the close of the future pastor's studies they would travel the world awhile, but with the strange metamorphosis that

"Thou my name shalt bear,
I thine, and each the other's vesture wear."

The second Book opens with a letter from a fair lady named Cordelia, who proclaims to Emanuel the history of her birth, her fortune, and her aspirations. Its recipient, snapping the links of Fate which had bound the two families together, treats the missive with scorn; but far otherwise with Ivor, who, fired by the romantic tale which the unknown and unseen correspondent poured forth, agreed that he would indite the reply. After much labour and thought the task was achieved, but on his way to post the carefully-penned response Edelrath comes to the rescue, and, as the latter thought, consigned the toil of hours to the flames. Fate, however, indignant at this interference with her plans, destined that it was the wrong letter which was thus ruthlessly consigned to destruction, and the fatal billet-doux winged its flight across the Atlantic.

The scene now changes to the snow-capped crags of Switzerland.

"And down the Needle Rock, loud roaring, crashed
Tumultuously an immense white cloud
Of snow and dust and splintered stones!"

'Twas an Alpine accident, and ere the sun had set death had claimed a victim—the metamorphosed Earl Glenaveril—while the would-be Emanuel Muller lay stretched on a bed of sickness, injured, as 'twas thought, beyond hope. The world knew nought of the strange compact which had been made, and buried the English peer (as they considered him) with all honour and pomp. The "young man," his companion, aroused no sympathy. No earl was he, or titled peer. So Glenaveril lived in the guise of his friend Emanuel; but the accident on the Alps had made a terrible inroad on his constitution—for weeks reason, health, indeed very existence tottered in the balance. But Cordelia, who had learned of his whereabouts, watches his bed of sickness, and nursed

"The long progression
Towards recovery, so uncertain slow
And painful."

Time wore on, and youth, combined with careful nursing and attention, deprives death of a victim. But a new difficulty arose. The girl had poured forth her soul to a lover who had seemed to her a humble student of theology. Her father's wish and her own inclinations had alike prompted her to place her destinies in the keeping of one whom the history of the past had interwoven with the life-being of her own self. He dare not proclaim that he was the Lord of Glenaveril's acres, so he lived on under the guise of deceit. The fraud was pious, but the deed was wrong. One person, and one alone, reaped a reward—the heir to the estate, who succeeded to a possession he owned not, and a coronet which should not have graced his brow. To please, too, a whim on the part of Emanuel—the real Emanuel—the romantic Cordelia had given away the boundless wealth bequeathed her by her father, a merchant prince of commerce, and was now a governess, eating the fruit of daily toil.

But the wanderings of delirium, and the countless nuances of life, had revealed to the quick-witted girl the secret which the metamorphosed Glenaveril was striving to conceal, and when

"He gasped, as at her feet he fell,
'Cordelia, I am not Emanuel!'
She smiled, and gently whispered in his ear,
'I knew it, child!' In these four words were spoken Glenaveril's pardon, which effaced his crime!"

Leaving the couple whom romantic destiny had thus linked with bonds of love, one question still remains, "Who was Glenaveril?" Surmise must afford an answer, which the poet has left enshrouded in doubt, but the inference is unmistakable:—

"The curse of the Glenaverils—violent death!
Seemed, by its last fulfilment, to attest
The dead man's right to that proud tomb, beneath
Whose pompous record now was laid to rest
The embittered life that, from its earliest breath
To its last groan, had never once possessed
Aught by that tomb's unconscious truth proclaimed
As his who there alone was rightly named."

Thus ends Glenaveril's story. That it will be read with interest is certain. The author's reputation, and the position he fills alike in the world of letters as in the ranks of society, will ensure the poem a widespread circle of fame. What, however, will be the verdict of public opinion it is dangerous to predict. There are some fine passages, especially in the first Book—by far the best portion of the work—which bear the impress of the finger of genius, but at every turn the memory unconsciously reverts to the magnificent cantos of "Don Juan," to which "Glenaveril" bears a strong resemblance. It is, perhaps, no slur upon the latter poem to say that the comparison will not rob the noble author of the aforesaid incomparable satire of the laurels which, for more than half a century, have decked the brow of Byron as the greatest poet this nation has ever produced. That Glenaveril is clever, pretty, and at times fired with the inspiration of "a poet's frenzy," cannot be denied, but whether it will live in the memories of the future, or give to the name of the younger Lytton a passport through the portals of immortality, is, perhaps, more than doubtful. Reader, judge for thyself, it is thy privilege—pass thy verdict.

NATIONAL REVIEW.*

The article in this number, to which our readers will instinctively turn first, is Professor Vambéry's account of his late visit to this country, and it well repays perusal. Fortune, rather than any political partiality, seems to have thrown the quondam Dervish chiefly among Conservatives; but he expressly disclaims any party feeling. "I shall always side," he says, "with the party which upholds England's banner of civilisation in the East, and does not permit despotic Russia to extend beyond measure."

While in London Vambéry met, among other prominent politicians, the present Secretary of State for India, and it is very satisfactory to learn from so high an authority, not only that Lord Randolph's "views are broad," but that he is "thoroughly conversant with India. . . . I was also greatly struck by his information on the present and recent past of Turkey, Persia, Egypt, and Central Asia. . . . I cannot hesitate in saying that Lord Randolph will prove the best instructed and most active and successful Minister for India."

We have no space left to quote further from this paper, which alone would give prominence to a number in other respects above the average, nor to deal with the other Essays which it contains, except in mentioning that Captain L. Cameron's paper on the Soudan is a careful and thoughtful attempt to show the manner in which a once paying province may be restored to its former state of prosperity.

MONDAY, AUGUST 31, 1885.

MEDICAL WOMEN FOR INDIA.

EVERY well-wisher to social progress in India will warmly thank Lady Dufferin for having initiated a fund for providing medical assistance for the women of India, and it is a characteristically gracious act on the part of Her Majesty to have accepted the position of its Patroness. I is just one of those movements, the success of which must be ensured by support from the highest quarters; and the knowledge, that it has the approval of the Empress, is more likely than anything else to overcome prejudice, and to enlist co-operation.

Few English ladies are aware how great is the need of an association of this character. In the largest Indian Stations, the ladies who, as the phrase runs, "go in for Zenana visiting," may be counted on one's fingers. To say that even an approach to anything which can be dignified by the name of intercourse between European and Native ladies takes place would be to use language for the purpose of misleading. Much, therefore, of what it is needful to say may be novel to many an old denizen of India. And it is with a feeling akin to shame that we, and many of our fair readers who, each in her own sphere, might have done somewhat to alleviate the solitude of her native sisters, and, by friendly intercourse, to bring the two nations closer together, must acknowledge this fact.

The Bombay Gazette contained, in its issue of July 28, an excellent account of the "Zenana work" going on at Hyderabad in the Deccan. The account may be considered in so far typical that, besides being strictly accurate, as a narrative of the lady doctor's experiences, it pretty nearly represents the condition of affairs in Zenanas in most parts of our own provinces. Mrs. Bielby, M.D., has also written, in the August number of the Journal of the National Indian Association, an impressive paper on the absolute necessity of female medical aid. We are indebted to these, among other, sources, for some facts which may well be pondered.

In England it was a kind of revelation when it was discovered that, in law, the masculine so far included the feminine that ladies could become members of vestries, could sit (and with great profit, too) at School Boards, and that they could actually take a medical (and, as has been proved of late, a musical) Degree. Whether, in the medical line, their advent has been an unmixed advantage, is a point on which opinions may fairly differ, and regarding which opponents may agree to disagree. In any case there is the training, in itself, as at present carried out, revolting in the last degree to any but the strongest minded—to put it mildly—of the ladies, and which has been known to repel even members of the so-called sterner sex. And, where men are available, as in this country, in any number, the question how far it is beneficial to the doctor herself to undergo the indispensable preliminaries to a Degree is an open matter.

But in India there is no alternative, and it is a question of female doctors or none. People who would look at one with a half-incredulous, half-amused, smile, if told that one of their lady friends was about to study medicine in order to practise in England, would loudly praise her self-devotion if told that she proposed practising among ladies in India; and deservedly so. The hospital fees alone are high, but when to these are added, not only the passage to the scene of one's future labours, but compulsory idleness in a strange land until enough of the language has been acquired to enable the doctor to communicate with her patients, it will be admitted that the highest devotion and perseverance must be credited to the fair aspirant—not to mention that a practice is not to be created in a day. Probably a year or two more would be needed, and we think Mrs. Bielby right in advising those only to go out who can rely on "a certain salary for the first two or three years, with a sufficient sum to cover the necessary expenses of going to India."

Now, all this being surmounted, who and what are her patients? Mrs. Bielby shall tell us in her own words:—

When the upper-class Indian ladies are ill or in suffering they are left to the mercy of the ignorant and superstitious Dhais. These women (Dhaies) have had no medical teaching; they are totally ignorant of what they profess to do. The only claim they have to treat their fellow-women is due to the fact that they belong to a certain class, whose fables, charms, and nostrums have been handed down from generation to generation for hundreds of years. I do not mean to say for a moment that all these women are essentially bad; but what I do maintain is, they are as ignorant of medical knowledge as a child who is just beginning to learn to read. Sometimes a medical man, either English or Indian, is allowed to see a Zenana lady, and prescribe for her. This is rarely done, and then only when the life of the patient is in great danger. Under no circumstances would he be allowed to make an internal examination. I have often been told by the Zenana ladies, "Oh yes; we have seen the doctor." But what does that mean? Why, only this, that behind a curtain the doctor has been allowed to ask the patient or her friends questions, and through the curtain feel her pulse!

Under such circumstances, and with women in such a social condition, is not the need of thoroughly qualified women beyond words to express?

Forty millions of women are thus left—with few exceptions, as Bombay, Madras, Amritsur, and a few other large cities—to live or die as best they may. Thousands die because they cannot have the most ordinary medical care. The need of duly qualified medical women for the women of India cannot be exaggerated.

Why, then, is not the call, on the Indian side, for medical women much louder? This can be answered in many ways. To begin with, Indian ladies are not likely to know, as yet, of the existence of such persons; and, were it otherwise, "for an Indian lady to come out of her home, and tell her wrongs to the outside world, would," says Mrs. Bielby, "be to disgrace herself. . . . When they feel their need the most, they have to bear it with a passive despair. They are quite dependent on Indian gentlemen, and on us Englishwomen, who know what they need, to make their wants known."

Moreover, there is the everlasting "Dustoor," the

"what-was-good-enough-for-my-mother-is-good-enough-for-me," feeling. And this is naturally fostered by those who benefit by it. The Dhaies are not going to give up without a struggle (why should they?), and the strength of their hold over the ladies is not to be under-estimated.

It is (continues the article from which we have already quoted) to the interests of these women to keep learning and enlightenment out of the Zenanas. In many cases this is easy enough; for as yet there are so few qualified lady doctors in India. But where there is such a lady, the Dhaies work on the fears, superstitions, and desire of the suffering woman and her distracted friends not to leave the customs of their forefathers; so that often when the qualified doctor arrives, it is to find the patient dead or dying. If she dies after the stranger has been called in, the Dhai does not fail to impress upon the friends of the poor woman it was because her advice was disregarded; therefore the curse has fallen.

The Zenana ladies are told by these women of the awful curses that will fall upon them for ever if they consent to consult a stranger—stranger in nation and religion. Stories without end are told of the tortures others have had to suffer who have so far gone from the customs of their forefathers. We, with our Western civilisation, and with our means of communication with each other, and all the world, may smile at all this; but we must remember these Indian women are not so fortunate. They have no means of refuting what is told them. I never found that the Indian gentlemen were averse to having a qualified lady to attend the ladies of their Zenanas; but where there was opposition it came from the ladies themselves.

So much for the necessity, and the difficulty of bringing supply and demand together. Once bring the "medical woman" face to face with her patient, and it would seem plain-sailing enough. The Doctor's help is gratefully acknowledged, and herself, we have no doubt, liberally remunerated. We will give next week an interesting sketch of the experiences of the fair correspondent of the Bombay Gazette, as it is crowded out of this number.

It is the aim of the Association founded by Lady Dufferin to provide medical women for hospital wards and families, to found scholarships for women students, and to supply trained nurses and midwives for hospitals and private houses. The Executive Committee consists of a small central Committee working under the presidency of Lady Dufferin. A fund has been already started, and the Maharajas of Ulwar, Rutlam, and Cashmere are among those who have promised support and sympathy. Lady Dufferin has expressed her desire to work in concert with the National Indian Association. An untold amount of good may be expected from an organisation started under such influential direction; one which, we may add, deserves, and will doubtless receive, the support of many a former Mem Sahib.

HONOURS FOR THE SOUDAN OPERATIONS.

At last the "Soudan Gazette" is out. In submitting his final report, dated Cairo, June 15, Lord Wolseley thus refers to the services of the Indian Contingent, not very warmly, it seems to us, considering that, in proportion to their numbers, they had more than their share of the fighting, and certainly far more than their share of the dirty work:—

These being supplied, he gave him two question-papers, one on philosophy and the other on English. ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, August 18th; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, August 16th.

THE Times correspondent telegraphs from Calcutta, under date yesterday, as follows:—

The Afghan boundary question, after occupying the first place in the public attention for six months, is now gradually slipping into the background, as one Ministerial statement after another makes it evident that there is no longer any immediate danger of war. He would, however, be sanguine who ventured to predict that the arrangement was other than temporary, or that Russia would not await the first favourable opportunity for renewing her policy of aggression. It is to be hoped that the Government will not relax the work of preparation, but will use the breathing time now given to such good purpose, that, when the danger again becomes imminent, it may find us ready, with railways and roads completed up to, and along, the frontier, and a powerful army available for the occupation of Candahar at a few days' notice.

General Macgregor arrived in Quetta on August 27, and, after a short visit to Zerghun, the site of the proposed sanitarium, fifteen miles distant, proceeded to Pishin, where he will remain about four weeks inspecting the sites suitable for a large intrenched camp.

Khan Bahadur Ibrahim Khan, assistant district superintendent of police at Peshawur, has started for Cabul on a special mission. After a brief stay in Cabul, he will proceed via Herat to join the Boundary Commission, in the place of Gholam Ahmed, who is returning on sick furlough. Two lakhs of rupees were despatched to the Ameer on the day of Ibrahim Khan's departure.

With reference to the reported tampering with the letters of the Boundary Commission at Herat, an inquiry has proved that the culprit was some one who had secured access to the mail-bag through the negligence of the troopers to whom it had been intrusted.

THE proposed increase to the Indian Army is stated from Simla (September 6th) to be about 10,000 Europeans and 17,000 Natives, exclusive of reserves.

In an elaborate reply to representations of the Madras Chamber of Commerce, deprecating resort to retrenchment instead of to borrowing, as a means of meeting the cost of the late war preparations, Lord Dufferin has set forth the views of the Government.

OBSERVING that Government alone can form an accurate estimate of the difficulties which surround it, his Lordship adds:—

It is not conceivable how public confidence could have been seriously maintained by the mere device of continuing to spend public money on a scale to which our resources were notoriously inadequate. A firm reliance on the financial resources at its command, such as the Chamber would wish to see the Government manifest, and such as in truth it possesses, is incompatible with such a use of those resources. It is hopeless to expect that funds can be furnished at one and the same time for the peaceful development of the country, and for preparations in view of a great war. Therefore prudence obviously dictated the enforcement of such immediate economies as could be obtained without serious injury.

The Government fully admits that the sudden stoppage of public works may involve waste. But the expenditure on war preparations, being of the nature of current expenditure, is distinctly of a kind which it is desirable to meet from current resources, if such a course be possible without an excessive increase of taxation, or undue retrenchment. It has been decided, therefore, to borrow a portion of the requisite amount and to provide the rest by retrenchment.

The total of the extraordinary expenditure is estimated at £4,230,000, of which the retrenchments furnish £1,797,000, leaving a balance of £2,433,000, which will be met, either by a loan, or by temporary expedients involving an ultimate borrowing.

Great latitude is left to the local governments in the matter of the economies to be effected. Indiscriminate and general reductions are certainly not ordered or effected, and, after allowing for the reductions on internal railways, the total outlay on railways this year has been increased by more than 100 lakhs above the amount taken in the Budget.

THE Allahabad correspondent of the Chronicle gives the following as the true version of the late "slight conflict" on the Afghan frontier, of which there have been rumours:—

It appears that on the 14th of last month the Afghan troops, who have been stationed at Kala-Tapa on the Kushk, left that place for the purpose of proceeding to Chaman-i-Baid, some twenty or thirty miles due north. On arriving within sight of the latter place, which is strictly within the limits of Afghan territory, they found it occupied by the Russians in some force. The latter not only showed no disposition to evacuate the place, but at once began to make hostile preparations. The Afghans thereupon began to retire, but were pursued and attacked by the Russian cavalry. During the fighting along the line of retreat the Afghans took three Russian prisoners, and brought them into their camp. The Governor of Herat, however, immediately ordered the men to be released, and allowed them to return to their own camp, which, of course, was done. The incident has caused much anxiety at Herat, where it is feared it may be made the excuse for another Russian advance.

REUTER tells us, under date Simla, September 2nd, that large subscriptions have been received from Native gentlemen in aid of Lady Dufferin's fund for supplying female medical aid to women in India.

MANY of our readers, expectant of the arrival of the "Husbands' boat," or of their cousins, and their sisters, and their aunts, will rejoice to hear that all restrictions on leave have been removed, and that furlough is now available as usual.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Times of India states that the siege train recently despatched to Afghanistan as a present from the British Government to the Ameer consisted in all of 28 pieces of cannon, viz., 12 bronze howitzers of 9 cwt., ten 8-inch howitzers of 22 cwt., and six 18-pounders of 42 cwt., together with 1,000 rounds of ammunition per gun. The guns and their belongings varied in weight from 18 to 34 tons. They severally required a team of 12 to 30 bullocks to draw them; and when it is remembered that these immense weights had to be conveyed from Rindli to Chaman, a distance of 160 miles, over bad roads and a mountainous country, it will be admitted that the landing of the siege train in Afghanistan was no small achievement.

SPEAKING of Sir H. D. Wolff's mission in Turkey, the Börsen Courier lately said:—

The offer of an English alliance is crossed by a similar proposal from Russia, who tempts the Turks with the prospect of their occupying the Balkan passes, and recovering possession of the fortress of Kars, in the event of their proving pliant to her wishes. In the Turkish Ministry there are two opinions on the subject, neither of them as yet having gained the upper hand; but negotiations are still going on.

THE Bombay Gazette announces, under date August 27, that the Secretary of State for India has sanctioned the establishment in India of a military college, constituted on somewhat the same plan as the Royal Military College at Sandhurst.

REUTER hears from Simla, on the same date, that the new Goorkha regiments are not expected to be formed until November next, the negotiations with Nepal not having yet been concluded.

UNPLEASANT encounters between European and Native gentlemen travelling in first-class railway carriages have been much too frequent of late. In one case a Native judge of the Bombay High Court was concerned; in one reported by the Indian papers last week a Bombay civilian, Mr. Maconochie, was involved. Oddly enough, in both, it was the Government officials, who acted with great want of forbearance and temper. In the present case the civilian certainly had no right to turn out of the carriage, for which both had tickets, an aged Hindoo priest, merely in order that he himself might breakfast alone in the carriage with a friend; and the contemptuous offer, through a porter, of the few annas' difference of fare between first and second-class was but adding insult to injury. The Bombay Government have markedly expressed their opinion of the conduct of Mr. Maconochie by suspending his promotion for two years; a punishment which, if severe, is scarcely more so than the offence warranted.

THE People's Budget, the organ of the railway service in India, would solve the "International Railway difficulty" by the somewhat decisive course of having separate carriages for Europeans and Natives. It says, speaking of the case (of the Native judge) above referred to:—

A great deal of fuss has been made over the Hon. Nanabhai Haridass having been refused admission into a first-class compartment where there was a sick lady. An English gentleman under the circumstances would have travelled coolie class in preference to disturbing a sick lady. It is said by one Native paper that the plea of having a sick lady was an afterthought; but Native papers, when pleading their own case, have a way of making things work round anyhow. The companies must recognise, sooner or later, that separate accommodation must be provided for Europeans and Natives, whose manners and customs are so much dissimilar, and who really cannot travel comfortably together.

THE Pioneer is informed that 15,000 Martini-Henry rifles are by this time landed for the Indian Army. Truly one may say, "What are these among so many?" The same authority tells us that it is calculated that about two years will be required for the re-arming of the whole Native Army. Suppose we are at war—as is most probable—with Russia before that time? Are our men to be sent as sheep to the slaughter with useless Sniders to oppose the efficient Berdan?

BURMESE ladies have hitherto been almost as rare birds in Europe as the Chinese. But we are to have a limited importation:—

Four Burmese gentlemen and three ladies, with thirteen followers, composing an Embassy to several of the Continental Powers in Europe, left Rangoon on August 5 by the mail steamer Africa for Calcutta. This will be the first time that Burmese Ambassadors to Europe have taken their wives with them.

THE Wiener Tagblatt gives currency again to the report that as soon as the railway to Merv is completed the Czar will go there to be crowned with the diadem of Tamerlane.

THE Numismatic Society's medal has this year been awarded to their distinguished member, Mr. Edward Thomas, who, for a period of nearly forty years, has been a constant contributor to their journal. May he long continue to wield his numismatic and archaeological pen!

Chit Chat.

"THE powers that be" in Cashmere seem in a bad way; the Maharajah is suffering from diabetes, while the minister is laid up with a carbuncle.

THERE is a disease in Italy known as "pellagra," produced by eating damaged maize; but wine-drinkers are remarkably exempt from this scourge. It is gratifying to learn that there is "some good" in indulging the natural craving for stimulant.

It has always been maintained by a certain section of economists that the duty on salt in India presses with great severity upon agriculturists, who are precluded thereby from giving their cattle the requisite amount of that necessary of life. The matter is likely to be set at rest, since inquiries are being made as to what happens in Burmah, where the tax is less than one-tenth of the Indian rate. Do the beasts of the field get a more liberal supply of salt owing to its cheapness?

It used to be said that one Englishman was worth three Frenchmen. Evidently this does not apply to rowing—at least, as regards Pondicherry, where, at the regatta, the prize was won by the crew of the French barque Marguerite.

Is it culpable homicide if those in authority refuse to repair a rotten bridge, and a man tumbles through it and breaks his neck?

Good news for India. Allahabad, according to the returns for the week ending July 16, 1885, was the healthiest city in the world, the death-rate having been only three per thousand annually. Well may the Pioneer say this is not mortality—but immortality.

THE washermen of Saidapet, in Madras, are in a sore plight. When they hang their clothes to dry the recalcitrant garments play the maddest pranks—trousers waltz, pillow-cases float away, while handkerchiefs disappear from them altogether. Some people would attribute all this to the wind, assisted by members of the light-fingered fraternity; but the Saidapetees prefer to attribute it to the malignant influences of a demon who has a special weakness for other people's clothes.

THE Viceroy's tennis court at Simla is a great success, but it is the only court in India. Where, oh! where are men to practice before they appear within the august precincts of the Viceregal Recreation Ground. Fortunately, perhaps, tennis is a costly game, in which only the well-to-do can indulge.

INDIA proclaims that there are three sorts of husbands who attend dances en famille, the jealous, the jovial, and the philosophic. The first-named always passes a miserable evening, the second "species" generally adjourns to the card-room, and "occasionally" visits the land of refreshment; the philosophic swain enjoys himself flirting, and beats his wife in a canter at her own game.

THREE baillies of Scotland, it is said, met together to compose an epitaph on a deceased provost of their town. None of them were poets, but, after a while, the first of the trio blurted forth—

"Here lies John, Provost of Dundee!"

The second was sorely puzzled what to say for the next line. At length, however, with the aid of a "wee drap of wiskie," he grandiloquently added—

"Here lies him, here lies he!"

But what could the third baillie do. The two first had exhausted all the poetry of the kingdom, so he was fain content with rhymed prose. Here is the result—

"A, B, C, D, E, F, G!"

ENGLAND can hold her own in cricket all the world over, and Bombay has proved no exception to the rule. The Hindus of that city were beaten in an innings and 150 runs to spare.

THE Bengalis have discovered that the recent earthquake was owing to the inability of the earth any longer to bear Sir Rivers Thompson's rule.

(SECOND NOTICE.)

In a recent issue we referred at some length to Mr. Boulger's account of, and forecasts concerning, that part of Central Asia which lies north-west of Hindustan, and we now propose to consider what he has to tell us regarding the important countries which lie to the north-east and east of our great Indian dependency; countries from the teeming peoples of which so many invading armies have proceeded, and may again, for all that can be foreseen, be formed. The exploits of Tchengis Khan, though they cannot well be repeated, may be emulated, and the motive of most of the Essays forming what may fairly be considered the second (and the larger) half of Mr. Boulger's book is to show how this may, not improbably, and at no very distant date, come to pass.

To the average reader such an idea will seem so extravagant as almost to amount to an hallucination. But those who have less cursorily considered the matter will probably be of a very different opinion. Indeed, as regards obedience to discipline, endurance, cool, dogged determination, and utter contempt of death, it would be difficult to surpass the material, available as food for powder, which is at the command of the Celestials.

The reader who desires to have, in few words, an account of one of the most remarkable races who ever ruled the destinies of mankind, will turn with great interest to Mr. Boulger's Essay on the Mongols, a most instructive paper, in which the gradual rise of their power is clearly sketched; and its decadence, and, latterly, the absorption by Russia of various Mongol conquests; Khiva, Bokhara, Khokand, are pointed to as significant. "The name of Mongol has," says the author, "been long deprived of its terrible significance among the peoples both of Europe and of Asia. At the present time the whole of the Mongol conquests, with the exception of Persia, and a narrow strip of territory proceeding from that State in a north-east direction to the Pamir, is divided between the three Empires of England, Russia and China.

* "Central Asian Questions." Essays on Afghanistan, China, and Central Asia, By Demetrius C. Boulger. With portrait and maps. London: T. F. Unwin, 1885.

Nothing will serve to show the extent of the Mongol conquests and influence more clearly than the fact that they embraced two of the largest of modern empires and our greatest dependency." It is satisfactory to know that so formidable a race have at present beat the swords into ploughshares and the spears into pruning hooks.

It is, however, less with the past, than with the future, that we are concerned, and space compels us to refrain from noticing in detail more than one interesting Essay, which will repay perusal, and for which we must refer our readers to the work itself.

The Introduction gives in half-a-dozen lines Mr. Boulger's views on the future of the great Central Asiatic problem, summing up, as it were, in the light of more recent events, the Essays on the "Future of China," (1880), "France and China" (1883), and the Paper, "Reflections on Chinese History, with reference to the present situation of affairs," read before the Society of Arts in February, 1884, and with which the volume closes.

It must be borne in mind that China prides itself on being self-sufficing. The three leading sentiments which guide Chinese policy are, "that their country has an inherent claim to superiority, that they have at all periods been a self-sufficing world to themselves, and that the vast extent of their territory makes it an axiom of prudence to abstain from cultivating close relations with neighbours independent of their authority" (p. 293). Indeed, the hatred of the Chinese towards all foreigners seems (p. 289) inherent in the people, and not to be very seriously discountenanced by the authorities; and it is probable enough that any foreign war would scarcely be an unpopular one. When the first Russian Embassies were sent by Peter, who was far-sighted enough to perceive the advantages of commerce with China, and desired to obtain "concessions for the caravan from Siberia," he was told (p. 243) that "trade was a matter of little consequence, and regarded by them with contempt. . . . For the future no transactions should be carried on between the two nations, except upon the frontiers." Another embassy, sent by Catherine, fared even worse, and was "summarily dismissed"; and when disputes arose, the Chinese, to put it in their own phrase, adopted towards Russia "the tone of an elder brother." So lately as 1805 a Russian Envoy, who would not perform "prostration," was abruptly told that he had better return, "as his journey had already been too long" (p. 245).

The treatment to which we ourselves, though possessing the command (which the Russians had not) of the sea, and the power to enforce a blockade, is well known; and it is, on the whole, not improbable that no footing would, except by force, have been obtained, but for the greed of the local officials, who derived enormous profits by conniving at intercourse with "foreign devils."

But apart from those who derive direct profit from commerce with us, there is no reason to doubt the accuracy of Mr. Boulger's opinion that no regret would be felt were a stroke of the "vermillion pencil" to annihilate all foreign trade, which "supplies" (p. 171) no inducement to the Peking Government to keep the peace with any foreign Power, were it for other reasons to hold it safe and politic to embark on a war."

The blow dealt by us, in concert with the French, in occupying Peking, led the Chinese to turn their especial attention to putting themselves in a state thus to "embark on a war." Not only have they established an arsenal at Kiangnan, near Shanghai, which turns out Armstrong guns nearly, if not quite, equal to the Woolwich productions (and it was stated the other day that some had been purchased for Singapore), not only have they made the Taku Forts all but impregnable, and fortified the approaches to other ports, but, since the French invasion of Tonquin, they have shown that, even if their officers were at one time (p. 299) such "that the men themselves often pay no heed" to them, Chinese Gordon's opinion was nevertheless justified, that they can fight, and fight well, under them. And of these men an army numbered by hundreds of thousands can be put into the field.

Mr. Colquhoun lately wrote on this subject:—"The pregnant fact emerging out of all this embroglio which most concerns England and the world is the renaissance of the military spirit in China. Hitherto the Chinese have not considered their army capable of standing before European troops, but they have now proved to themselves and the world, in a hard-fought campaign, that they cannot only make a respectable resistance, but are able to rally their beaten forces and, for a time at least, roll back the tide of war; and they have now seen the proudest nation in Europe accept from them terms of peace on the morrow of a serious reverse, which Chinese opinion not inexcusably magnifies into a disaster. And it must be borne in mind that the Chinese armies in Tonquin and Formosa were chiefly raw levies taken from the field, and placed undrilled in the front, where they learnt whatever they knew of military art. Their "regulars" were always kept in the north ready for Russia. If, under such circumstances, the Chinese were not elated, they would be something less or more than human. And the pride which has been flushed by these successes chafes at the sudden cessation of hostilities in the very height of their victory; and the martial ardour of the nation may press for another outlet."

Nothing is more astonishing than the inflexible tenacity of purpose which distinguishes the Chinese. Nullum tempus occurrit regi: and no time bars a claim of the Hwangti to what China once possessed. "Whatever once belonged to the Empire shall again belong to it," seems the motto. They have forced the Russians to evacuate Kuldja, and decapitated their envoy to St. Petersburg because the retrocession was not unconditional. All Central Asia has once belonged to them; therefore, they are only biding their time before again laying claim to as much as they can hope to get. Their claims are only limited by their power to enforce them. This lends much interest to Mr. Boulger's latest forecast, contained in his introduction above referred to, and with which we must conclude our extracts.

"China, not less than England, is interested in Russia's policy and immediately affected by her action. Whether in Kashgaria or in Corea, on the Amoor or on the Ili, the Chinese have as much to apprehend from Russian force and fraud as England has at Herat and in Afghan Turkestan. The Chinese cannot be reproached with any of the apathy or indifference to Imperial necessities which must be laid to the charge of the present (May, '85) responsible governors of England. They still believe that the true way to meet an enemy is to show a bold front to his advances, to take their own measures, and to scorn to ask promises from him, which they know must be unmeaning, and will never be kept. They also know their own mind. The power of China is not yet equal to the vastness of her pretensions, but it will some day enable her to make them good in the face of every rival. When England and Russia have reached the limit of their resources and authority in Asia, China will still be developing the power to hold her own, and to exercise on the future history of the world that influence which cannot yet be measured with any degree of accuracy. China is now the least powerful factor in the Central Asian question; but, unless her rulers are extremely apathetic, she is the power that will acquire material strength in the greatest degree. The day of hostile collision between England and Russia will not wait until China is ready to take her proper share in the struggle; but, when both combatants have retired exhausted, from the fray, or have reconciled themselves to the new conditions which may have been created, China will be ready, not merely to hold her own, but to benefit by the blunders and shortcomings of her neighbours."

Here we take leave of Mr. Boulger, having read, alike with pleasure and profit, his valuable and important work, the careful perusal of which we recommend to every one who wishes really to know "What is What," and, as regards Chinese administrators and (pp. 220, 348, 408) generals, "Who is Who," in China.

THE JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

The Third Part of Vol. XVII. of this Journal has just been issued, along with the annual Report. An inspection of the contents of recent volumes shows that the Society is now an active centre of Oriental learning; for its articles consist of monographs of high literary merit bearing on every part of the wide field comprised in the purview of the Society's work. The healthy activity now displayed, and the prosperous financial position of this learned body, are in great part due to the unremitting exertions and genial manners of the accomplished scholar, Mr. W. S. W. Vaux, who for the last ten years gave most loyal service to the Society which had made him its secretary. This able and courteous gentleman has now passed to his eternal rest; but he was the model of what such a man should be. He ever made it his pleasure to facilitate progress by encouraging all and discouraging none. The Oriental world owe him a debt of gratitude for the impetus he gave to their favourite studies, and all who knew him feel that they have lost a friend. Several other able men, sketches of whose careers are contained in this Report, have also passed from us during this year. Some who may be mentioned are Sir Bartle Frere, Charles Philip Brown, the great Telugu scholar, Sir Harry S. Parkes, of Chinese fame, Sir James Alexander, who gave us Cleopatra's needle, the excellent Arabic scholar, Rogers Bey; and the erudite Dr. Trumpp. Most fitly does the Journal give a sketch of the life of Mr. Samuel Robinson, the cotton-spinner of Manchester, who possessed a warm and gentle heart and a cultivated intellect. He studied Persian as a recreation with much success, and published a series of delightfully-poetic translations, written in a kind of metric prose. His unaffected modesty kept him from fame, but he was beloved by his workpeople and by a large circle of learned friends; and, although he lived to the mature age of ninety-one years and nine months, we feel that we have lost far too soon this good and faithful Orientalist.

The Report ends with Prof. Monier Williams' speech on the opening of his Institute at Oxford. It is to be hoped that his very practical scheme will meet with the success which his energy and devotion ought to command.

The articles in this Part are on the age of the Avesta, which the writer, Prof. De Harlez, places between 700 and 100 B.C. Some notes on the Chinese game of chess, by Mr. Holt, and some superstitions of Ceylon, by Le Mesurier, are followed by a sketch of the Vernacular Literature of the Panjab, by T. H. Thornton, D.C.L. We are pleased to see attention directed to this almost virgin soil, and anticipate some interesting results from the interest now awakened in Panjab. The last paper is on the Beginnings of Writing in Tibet, by the industrious scholar, Lacouperie. This interesting paper is illustrated with some Mo-so hieroglyphics, which are at present undecipherable.

In this number the indefatigable Colonel Malleson, having finished the last of his "Ambushes and Surprises" (those at Arab and Azamghur), commences a life of Marlborough's brother-in-arms, Prince Eugene of Savoy. We reviewed the "Ambushes and Surprises" as a whole, and propose to take the same course with the biography now in hand. "The Last Fight of the Revenge" well records old Richard Grenville's marvellous heroism in fighting fifty-three Spanish vessels (with 15,000 men) with his single ship (crew, all told, 100), sinking three and killing 2,000 men. The story, which should be known to all, is like a romance, and is well and thrillingly told.

A perusal of the pleasantly written "Captain's Yarns," of which this is the second instalment, and of Colonel Hildyard's interesting account of Peter the Great, brings us to the paper which will chiefly interest our readers, "The Formation of a Reserve for the Indian Army," by an Indian Staff Officer. As this essay is as yet incomplete we shall, pending the issue of its concluding portion, confine ourselves to saying that it is the armies of the Native States, reorganised and placed under stricter discipline, which should, in the "Staff Officer's" opinion, form the reserve. The subject is, both in its political and military aspects, one of the highest interest and importance.

We are pleased to hear that Mr. A. N. Wollaston's "Anglo-Persian Pocket Dictionary," which has approved itself, to all who have purchased it, for accuracy, is to be followed up by a far more ambitious work, by the same author, still bearing the name of dictionary, though really rising to the dimensions (1,000 pp.) of a lexicon. The production of the work, which is the result of many years' labour, involving the collation of newspapers and modern Persian writings in order to ensure its containing the current parlance, if not the argot, of Teheran, has been liberally subsidised by the Indian Secretary and Council. Every penny spent on a really good Persian dictionary, which is to reproduce in Persian every word in the English language, is well spent, the more so that official encouragement is not only merited by, but required for, the production of a work so important as that which Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. announce at the—all things considered—by no means high price of four guineas, but to defray the cost of which, greatly exceeding the amount given by the Secretary of State, the subscriptions of learned societies and philologists, not to speak of the many officials to whom a knowledge of Persian is indispensable, will certainly not be wanting. The volume will, it is hoped, be so elaborate in all its details as to remain a standard work of reference for future years.

The same firm announce an abbreviated edition, brought up to date, of Thornton's "Gazetteer of India." The work is to be reduced in size by the omission of many of the less important details, while at the same time there will be given many hundred names of places not included in any former edition. The areas and populations have been revised in accordance with the Census Report of 1881. The book will be edited by Sir Roper Lethbridge and Mr. A. N. Wollaston, and will form one volume of about 1,000 pages octavo.

MEDICAL WOMEN FOR INDIA.

The following are the extracts from "D. W.'s" letter to the Bombay Gazette to which we referred in our editorial last week. We gladly contribute our little mite by inserting them, in the sincere hope that the perusal of these interesting details may in some degree tend to keep alive interest in this important subject. The hospital is thus referred to:—

The entrance to the zenana wards, which are in a semi-detached bungalow in the compound of the hospital, is through a single gateway and arch opening on the quadrangle, which is always crowded with men, students, patients, and servants. This necessitates great precautions on the part of the ladies and their attendant cavaliers, husbands, brothers, and fathers generally, to prevent the slightest possible infringement of the purdah rules. The ladies arrive in all sorts and descriptions of conveyance, from an English-built coach to the primitive-looking rath, a most grotesque affair, the barbarity of which must be seen to be appreciated. All these vehicles, bandies, palanquins, and raths are covered with large sheets to intercept the sacrilegious gaze of the opposite sex, and to suffocate the unfortunate occupants, one would think. But they survive it, and, indeed, it seems they like it, for, when one takes a peep at them by cautiously looking under the coverings, one sees a number of laughing eyes and smiling faces, highly amused at the Peringhee's astonishment and disgust. It is not uncommon to see two or three stout women slip out of one palanquin, quite regardless of the sufferings their unfortunate bearers must have undergone, or to find a dozen women alight from a bullock shigram, in which they must have been literally packed like sardines. It is such an event to them to leave their homes that one sick person's coming to the hospital is made an excuse for bringing out a troop of stout hearty relatives and servants. This is very trying to one's nerves, when one looks around the room in despair, wondering how all the work can be got through in one morning. But the thought of the poor prisoners out for an hour's recreation suffices to change anger to pity. The mere fact of these women—many of them of really good position and highly connected—coming out to the dispensary, shows that the institution is popular, and is gaining ground amongst the people. Some of the men are still extremely reluctant to allow their wives and daughters to make these periodical visits to the hospital, fearing, perhaps, that they will create a love of going out, which would be extremely inconvenient to such domestic tyrants. Sometimes the women do avail themselves of the temporary liberty thus allowed them, by taking a roundabout way home through the city, so as to see as much of it as they can. In one instance, a lively girl and favourite patient paid a penalty for doing this. Her husband allowed her to come to the hospital with an old aunt and an ancient retainer of the family as guard. On one occasion the wife succeeded in persuading the old retainer to drive them all over the city before going home—an innocent diversion enough! But when the husband heard of it he produced a pistol, and declared his intention of shooting the poor girl. Her aunt appeared the next day with the lamentable tale, and I had to send for the patient, peremptorily insisting that she should come, with the escort of her spouse, of course.

That part of the work which consists in visiting the zenanas I generally find very pleasant. The simple pleasure with which one is received, the courtesy and kindness displayed even by the poorest, lighten the heavy task of professional work. Otherwise, the visit is not very agreeable. The lanes of the city of Hyderabad are indescribably unpleasant, and frequently one has to get out of the carriage and walk some distance down an unsavoury lane to enter a house which is in a dreadfully insanitary condition, and where one sees the poor victims of disease placed amongst surroundings which render the task of treatment apparently a hopeless one. All this is rendered more pitiful by the eager politeness and confidence shown by all. Generally the Madam Sahib is escorted into the house by half-a-dozen curious male relatives, and is led through the door into a little courtyard, and then into an outer verandah, where a chair is dragged from some recess, on which she is seated in state, and is soon surrounded by a dozen or two of curious women and children, who freely criticise her dress, appearance, and demeanour, in all good-nature, however. Then she is invited to step into the inner room, which is generally quite dark and stifling, and there she begins the task of listening to the sufferer's history and doing what she can to relieve her ailments. Frequently all one's wishes are carried out faithfully, and the results, when favourable, are invariably remembered with gratitude. Often women come, who have been cured, expressing all sorts of goodwill (generally by hoping that I may live to 125 years), whom one has quite forgotten, much to their surprise and sometimes indignation. Even in cases where the Madam Sahib has not been able to do any good, her efforts to do so are mentioned with gratitude, and eyes are full of tears for the lost ones. The foregoing description applies, as far as the houses are concerned, to the poor, of course. In several of the houses of the middle class which I have visited, I have found evidences of education and refinement, in the shape of easy English and Hindustani books, and fancy work in wool and crewels, in the hands of the girls, who are sensible and polite, and show themselves capable of exercising a wholesome influence in their home by carrying out directions as to sanitary improvements. Amongst the highest classes, in the families of the noblemen, one meets with all the means and appliances of civilised life, and there is very little opposition to one's orders, though in one or two cases, where the ruling spirit is an old lady, conservative to the backbone, the difficulties are great.

With regard to the treatment of newly-born and young children, difficulties are frequently met with, as the prejudices of all the old women of the house are up in arms against any innovations. And it is in this direction that improvement is most needed. The massacre of the innocents is dreadful indeed here, owing to barbarous notions of treating the poor little ones. A baby's troubles begin with its birth, for it is immediately pulled and hauled about by a native dai, its head being compressed and moulded into shape, its nose pinched to give it a proper shape, its legs and arms stretched till it is a wonder they are not dislocated. Then it is dosed every hour or so with castor oil and a horrible concoction of forty different kinds of herbs called "ghoot," and tortured in various other ways. It is not dressed till the sixth day, except by being covered with old rags, preferably those belonging to some very aged man, as that is supposed to ensure long life to the infant. The unfortunate is not allowed out of the arms of its nurse for six days, and not out of the room in which it was born for months. It is only washed on its birth, and again four years afterwards, when the "Bismillah" ceremony is performed. Upon once insisting that a baby should be washed daily, I was triumphantly told that his father had only been washed once in four years in his childhood, and that his son must be treated on the same plan. I must do the gentleman the justice to say that he was not of the same opinion, and he overruled his womankind.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

BRITISH BURMA.

THE Province of British Burma, with its 88,556 square miles, four and a-half million inhabitants, and £2,500,000 of annual revenue, is the last of the acquisitions made by the East India Company, and absorbed in 1858 by the Crown. Following the course of policy invariably pursued in India, we had, in Further India, extruded the former Native sovereign from the sea-board, and we have, in Rangoon and other ports, such as Maulmain, excellent outlets—but always through our own provinces—for the produce of Native Burma, as well as for that of the British Burmese Districts.

In a former article we indicated the policy which should, in our opinion, be pursued towards the Burmese King, whom, whatever may be his character, it is undoubtedly true wisdom to conciliate as far as possible. Under the present detestable régime, the subjects of Native Burma (though exposed to death by most barbarous tortures if caught in the attempt) throng into our territories in order to escape the cruel and arbitrary exactions to which the Burmese subject them. Hence it comes to pass, that, the frontier being purely artificial, the population on its one side in no wise differs, except as regards prosperity, from that on the other, that the intercourse between the two is incessant, and that cases, civil and criminal, arise, which necessitate the intervention of our authorities, men on the spot, and habituated to deal with such matters. That these authorities should thus intervene, would at first sight, seem to be the system best adapted to existing circumstances, and in the interior of the Province this is felt to be the case.

But in Rangoon, the capital and principal seaport, this opinion is not by any means popular. The cry is twofold. "Cut all disputes with Burma short by annexing Theebaw's entire territory, and become, like Singapore, a Crown colony." In the former wish the entire Burmese Commission, of course, join. The Chief Commissioner might become a Lieutenant-Governor, Deputy Commissioners would blossom into Commissioners, Assistants into Deputies, and so on. Their feeling is akin to the longing of a regiment to get into action on the chance of promotion through casualties. For the second object—the transfer to the Colonial Office—we have every reason to suppose they have no special velleity. Be this as it may, such as we have described them are the aspirations of the Rangoon commercial community, and we will briefly state the reasons urged in their favour. They consider, in the first place, that British Burma, as a province, produces a surplus revenue of 100 lakhs, which is poured into the "all-devouring maw" of the Indian Exchequer; and they are, moreover, wroth, that this large payment to Indian funds has as yet failed to secure to the province a fairly large apportionment of public funds for railways, or an adequate judicial establishment. Their views are fully set forth in the letter, addressed by the Secretary of the Rangoon Chamber of Commerce to the London Chamber, which is printed in full in the Rangoon Gazette of June 2.

They state that, in their opinion, British Burma, though—

Politically tied to the Indian Peninsula, has nothing in common with India geographically in any way whatever. . . . Although the richest parts of the province have been under British rule for about thirty years only, the Burmese have already become consumers of British manufactures to a very much larger extent per head of the population than the people of India, who have been so much longer under civilised rule. In the figures annexed to the petition of the London Chamber of Commerce the annual consumption of British produce and manufactures per head in India for 1884 is given as 16 pounds sterling. In Burma the imports from Great Britain for the official year 1883-84 were £2,830,336, exclusive of imports via Calcutta. In the Administration report for that year the population of British Burma is estimated at 4,334,000 persons, giving a consumption per head of 65 pounds sterling, or four times that of India. It is true that part of these imports are actually consumed in Upper Burma and the Shan States; but some of the imports to Indian ports also find their way beyond the frontier. The feudatory States of India alone contain a population enormously exceeding the outside population supplied from British Burma, and presumably the population of these States is not included in the calculation which gives 16 pounds per head as the annual consumption in India. The native of India buys little else from the manufacturers of Great Britain than a few yards of cotton cloth; the people of Burma all spend their money freely on imported luxuries.

Nevertheless, say the Chamber, the political connection with India would not be complained of were the province fairly treated. "So far from receiving justice it is the most heavily taxed portion of the Empire, while it is starved in its requirements on every side, and in many ways the interests of Burma are sacrificed to suit the convenience of India." Officials are constantly changed. The town of Rangoon, though the third city, in point of commerce, in the Indian Empire, has no High Court; for the want of this, and an adequate judicial staff, people are "driven to accept any compromise out of Court as preferable to enduring the delays of the law as at present administered."

Still worse, proceeds the letter, is the treatment to which the Province is subjected in the matter of public works. Though it has paid to the Indian Treasury six millions sterling in eight years, it has but some 300 miles of railway and few roads, and but two millions have been spent in public works during the same period of eight years.

Relying on these figures, the Chamber "trusts that the agitation for Imperial Federation may afford an opportunity for the consideration and redress of such injustices as that from which this province suffers, and that Burma may be constituted a colony unattached to the Indian Peninsula," Burma being augmented by the annexation of King Theebaw's dominions, whence in a few months of 1883-84 no less than a quarter of a million persons emigrated to our own territories, and where "British annexation would be welcomed."

The Bengal Chamber has taken up the cause, advocating annexation of Burma proper, and a more liberal policy towards British Burma, but not supporting the demand for separation from India. The Times thus reports them:—

The Bengal Chamber of Commerce has addressed a long letter to the Indian Government on the subject of its policy towards Burma. While disclaiming any sympathy with the agitation in favour of separation from India recently set up at Rangoon, it strongly urges a more liberal policy towards British Burma, especially in respect to the extension of railways and roads. It points out that the Government has assumed responsibilities with respect to Upper Burma, with which it has never attempted adequately to deal, and that it is intolerable that a petty and disorganised State should be allowed to form an almost insurmountable barrier between two Empires, whose mutual interests demand that they should be friendly neighbours.

We are concerned to admit that there is a good deal more than "a substratum of truth" in the allegations of the Rangoon Chamber. A fair allotment for public works would undoubtedly exceed a quarter of a million annually. And the members of the commercial community cannot fail to contrast their own judicial staff with the Chief Justice and two puisne Judges at Ceylon, which is vastly inferior both in size and population, and scarcely equal in amount of trade, to British Burma. A correspondent of the Rangoon Gazette makes a still more striking comparison. "If," says he, "the four little islands, Grenada, St. Vincent, Tobago, and St. Lucia, measuring only 700 square miles, with a total population about equal to that of the town of Rangoon alone, and a total revenue about equal to the Municipal revenue of Rangoon, are entitled to have among them four governors and four superior Courts, surely all British Burma is entitled to something more than a Chief Commissioner and one Recorder." Anomalies are not always unjustifiable, the world is full of them. But this contrast certainly borders on the ridiculous; and, holding it, as we do, to be the first duty of Government to protect person and property, and to take adequate means, by the establishment of a sufficient number of suitable tribunals, to that end, we cannot well escape the conclusion that this duty has been very imperfectly fulfilled, so far as concerns Burma, by the Government of India.

But there is a wide distinction between desiring, as we do, to see the present arrangements improved, and seeking wholly to subvert them. The political reasons which require the union of Burma and India appear to us to outweigh every other consideration. Not to say that it is solely owing to the expenditure of Indian funds that Burma is British at all, and that a Chamber of Commerce sits in Rangoon, the proposed change would bring the Foreign Office into direct contact with Theebaw or his successor. At present the questions arising between us and our barbarous neighbour are decided in the way in which all Oriental questions ought to be decided, on the spot; by the Deputy of a high officer, the Chief Commissioner, or, if needful, in Rangoon by the Chief Commissioner himself. Were the proposed change adopted, every matter of the smallest importance would, especially if involving any question remotely connected with diplomacy, go through the Colonial Office to the Foreign Office and back, 15,000 miles, before definite instructions could be given, much less acted upon. In the opinion of "English merchants in Burma," says the Bombay Gazette, in a moderate and sensible leading article, "the wealth of the best unopened market in the world is waiting ready to be tapped, and the only fear is that the French, who, in their desire to take active measures for the consolidation of an Indo-Chinese Empire have gone so far as to make a treaty of friendship with King Theebaw, may be beforehand with us in the race for the wealth to be derived from commerce with the countries between India and China. Therefore the Rangoon Chamber of Commerce, having tried in vain to spur on the Indian Government to a forward policy in Barma, is now agitating for separation from the Indian Empire, in the hope that the Home Government, induced by the prospect of great commercial gain to England, may not remain inactive, while France extends her influence over Indo-China up to the present boundaries of British territory, and so monopolises the trade of that populous region. But it is just because of the possibility of renewed French activity in the Indo-Chinese Peninsula, that Burmese and, perhaps, Imperial interests would suffer if the prayer of the Rangoon traders were acceded to. The external policy of Burma, if she were made a Crown Colony, would be directed by the Colonial Office; and the Colonial Office has in recent years been so notoriously apathetic and ignorant in all that relates to the designs of foreign Powers in the distant parts of the earth, that no change that could be made would be more encouraging to France than this which is being advocated, hastily and by ill-advice at Rangoon."

There are two ways of dealing with Asiatic States. One is that of Russia, literally solvitur ambulando; she walks into them and annexes. The other is our own, to spare them and to foster them as best we may. No one who knows and can compare British India with Asiatic Russia will have much doubt which system is to be preferred. But while adhering to our own views of policy and fair dealing, we must not relax our vigilance where, as in Native Burma, others might be less scrupulous. Thus far the Rangoon merchants are assuredly wise in their generation; and it would rejoice us much if, as a first step, it were found possible to ensure some direct knowledge of the many intrigues which are unquestionably rife at King Theebaw's Court, by re-establishing the agency at Mandalay.

INDIA OFFICE NEWS.

MR. TRELAWNEY SAUNDERS.

We much regret to hear that Mr. Trelawney Saunders, the able Geographer of the India Office, is about to retire from the post, which he has held with so much credit to himself, and with so great advantage to the public service, for a period of seventeen years. The changes which were made in the Geographical Department when Mr. Saunders succeeded the late Mr. Walker, are known to, and their value acknowledged by, every geographer who interests himself—and what geographer does not?—in Asiatic exploration.

Mr. Saunders, himself among the chief of European cartographers, was the first to recognise the wealth of geographical information, previously inaccessible to the scientific world, which the archives of the India Office contained, and he wisely determined to make it generally known by publishing a catalogue of what was actually in hand, a catalogue to which several appendices, including recent additions, of maps, MSS., &c., have from time to time been made. It speaks much for the indefatigable energy of Mr. Trelawney Saunders, that no less than thirty-five lists of accessions to the India Office collection have been issued since 1878.

In cartography his work was constant: and among other notable maps completed by him, that of the "Mountains and River Basins of India, in two maps, with explanatory Memoir," deserves especial notice, as in this work the enumeration of the Himalayan chains, which all subsequent exploration has confirmed, was for the first time formally stated.

It will be difficult to find a successor of Mr. Saunders' ability, and for experience in his department he simply cannot be replaced; while the India Office will sustain a great loss, his colleagues will long miss the genial presence and readiness to afford information, no matter at what personal inconvenience, which always characterised Mr. Trelawney Saunders.

THE RUSSIAN TRANSLATORSHIP.

We cannot help thinking it a piece of very false economy to abolish the Russian translatorship at the India Office. The saving will be all but inappreciable, while, at any moment, the absence of a trustworthy translator may prove a serious matter, and this little economy may turn out very penny wise and pound foolish. Is the India Office, on which our relations with Russia so greatly hinge, to be dependent on the Foreign Office for its renderings of Russian documents? (Not to speak of newspapers, every one of which, in a despotic country, is an ill disguised organ of the Government.) Is the Foreign Office so very strong in European languages?

Wherefore we hear with much searching of heart, that Mr. Robert Michell, who was one of the first English travellers in Turkistan after the Russian advance up the Jaxartes in 1864, and who has been Russian translator at the India Office for some years, is to be placed forthwith on the retired list, it being proposed to abolish the post of Russian translator at the India Office.

Mr. Michell's services have, in our judgment, been, and would doubtless continue to be, well worth the moderate sum paid for them.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.
W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pure diamonds and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

CHLORODYNE

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA.

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London. REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.
To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.
DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of the medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE IS THE TRUE PALLIATIVE IN NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURERS, J. T. DAVENPORT, 39, Russell St., W.C.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, August 25th; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, August 23rd.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs on the 13th inst. :—

The Anglo-Indian newspapers are all but unanimous in the opinions which they express regarding the settlement of the Afghan frontier question. They point out that Russia surrenders not a single inch of ground, but, on the contrary, has succeeded in establishing her sovereignty over a large tract to which, six months ago, she advanced no higher claim than that it should be recognised as neutral; and that, with regard to Zulfikar, she only waives a claim which may be renewed, or, more probably, acted on without notice, at any moment. Public opinion in this country is well summed-up by a journal which says :—

"It is now little more than a question of miles between Russia and Herat, and it is assuredly a question of time merely to the next move in the game, which is now as much a matter of certainty as any of the events that have gone before. At the same time, it is generally admitted that, as the late Ministry did not make a stand at the time of the Penjdeh affair, and insist on the recall of General Komaroff and the withdrawal of the Russian troops, their successors had no alternative save to make the best of a situation for which they were in no way responsible. Nothing now remains but to wait and watch, meanwhile making every preparation for a struggle which must inevitably come sooner or later."

The telegraph line opened to Bokhara is said to be much appreciated by the traders.

A Bombay newspaper states that 3,000 workmen have arrived at Kizil Arvat, and that there is a great display of activity in connection with the railway, which is now completed for seven versts beyond that place.

There is little news from Afghanistan. The Bala Hissar at Cabul is being pulled down, the materials being utilised for the construction of a citadel within the city.

Work is now progressing well on the Bolan Railway. The rails are already laid on the lower section for a distance of 18½ miles, and the Kirta siding is finished; 2,800 men are employed on that section. There has been no case of cholera for three weeks, and the general health of the workers is excellent.

THE formation is announced of two new Bengal cavalry regiments, the nucleus of which is to consist of volunteers from existing corps, and a third of the Native commissions in which will be conferred on Native gentlemen bringing recruits with horses, fit for service, and a sum of money to complete their equipment; a commission as jemadar being conferred on those bringing twenty such men, and a ressalidar's on those bringing forty or upwards.

THIS is in a manner reverting to a system once traditional in India, and will doubtless be popular.

THE total increase is, Cavalry, 5,072; Goorkhas, 5,000; general Native Infantry, 10,000 to 12,000.

✕ WE are glad to learn, on the same authority, that—

L dy Dufferin's fund for providing medical aid for the women of India is making rapid progress. The organisation of the Bengal branch will be undertaken on the arrival of the Lieutenant-Governor and Lady Thompson, who are expected to return from Ceylon this week. In the Central Provinces a prospectus has been circulated in the vernacular, and meetings have been held at various places. Classes for the teaching of midwifery have been started at Jubbulpore, and a Native gentleman has offered to defray the cost of similar classes at Nagpore. Strong committees are being formed in Hyderabad and Mysore.

The Natives Princes have shown much interest in the movement and a desire to co-operate liberally. The Maharajah of Ulwar is not only selecting students to be sent to the female training schools, but also proposes to open a dispensary, under a Native lady doctor, solely for the use of women. The Maharajah of Benares has presented a handsome subscription to the fund. ✕

THE Viceroy will leave Simla on October 21st, and march across the hills to Massoorie and Dehra. He will then go to Delhi, Agra, Jeypore, Jodhpore, and Ulwar.

After visiting Bhurtpore and Dholepore he will spend a few days at Lucknow, make short halts at Cawnpore and Benares, and reach Calcutta on December 6th.

It seems likely that the formation of the proposed Camps of Exercise may be abandoned for financial reasons.

THE opium revenue for the five months of the current financial year amounted to Rs. 3,60,73,065, which sum is better than the estimate by Rs. 21,10,565. The excess is derived entirely from the pass duty on opium exported from Bombay. The receipts from sales of Bengal opium are below the estimate.

A REUTER telegram from Kashmir states that "the Maharajah of Kashmir died on Saturday after a long illness. There is great mourning and excitement among the inhabitants of the city, and the durbar and bazaars are closed." We hope Sir O. St. John will be instructed to remain in Kashmir, where Russian intrigue is rife, and will now be even more so.

REUTER reports from Calcutta under date Friday last :—

Subscriptions have been opened for the relief of the sufferers by the disastrous floods with which, owing to excessive rains, Bengal has been visited. The crops in the district around Calcutta are utterly ruined, a large tract of country being completely submerged. Part of the railway has been carried away at Lucker Serai, and the action of the water has caused some serious landslips on the Darjeeling line.

A breach has been made by floods in the Eastern Bengal Railway line at Ranaghat.

We are, however, glad to see later intimations that the floods, which seem to have been unusually disastrous, are subsiding.

WE have been hoping to see a contradiction of the subjoined. Whatever losses the Commission sustained were assuredly sustained while on a difficult and harassing duty, and ought to be amply compensated :—

SIMLA, August 3.—The Government appears to be so pressed for money that it has resolved not to grant any compensation to the members of the Afghan Boundary Commission for the losses they sustained during the march across the Parapomus after the defeat of the Afghans at Penjdeh. The losses in some cases were very heavy.

WE think the attempt made by the Government of India to endeavour, by direct intercourse with Pekin, to obtain the withdrawal of the obstacles placed by the Chinese on our commerce with Tibet a good move, though Russia is certain to oppose any concession of the kind, and has recently "shown her teeth" by procuring Mr. Dalgleish's expulsion from Kashgaria.

SIMLA, Sept. 9.—It is understood that Mr. Macaulay, Secretary to the General and Revenue Department of Bengal, who is at present in England, is about to proceed to Pekin on a special mission in connection with the development of trade with Tibet.

THE Bombay Samachar is wroth that the scale of educational grants in aid should not be the same for Natives as for Europeans. It considers the distinction quite in keeping with the general distinction which is always observed in this country between Europeans and Natives. "In every grade of the service a European gets higher pay than a Native, and in the railway and other public departments the same rule is observed. It is, therefore, quite natural that on the same principle Europeans should receive greater help than the Natives for educational purposes. Unfortunately, at the Educational Conference there were hardly any Native representatives who were in a position to make a stand against the proposal; whereas the European members, one and all, were quite able to fight for the cause. Mr. Lee Warner, who presided, tried to explain the anomaly by stating that the cost of educating a European child in this country was heavier than that of educating a Native. We should have expected some better argument than this from an officer of Mr. Lee-Warner's calibre. We cannot, however, blame him, for he nor anybody else has no explanation to give."

The same paper complains, and, if the complaint be true, not without good ground, that some Khoja ladies, who had gone to the cloth market to make purchases, were grossly insulted by certain cloth-dealers in the place. "This circumstance, if true, should not be allowed to pass without serious notice. Native ladies are just beginning to have a little freedom, and it would be a pity if such a good beginning receives a check simply through the misbehaviour of a few vagabonds. It is the duty of the police and the respectable portion of the cloth-dealers in the market to thoroughly investigate the matter. We hear that the offenders in this case were identified and were even summoned, but we regret to say that the matter was subsequently allowed to drop."

WE quite agree with the Samachar's remarks, and though the prejudices which have so long prevailed cannot be eradicated in a day, cannot but regret that so good an opportunity of punishing the offenders was allowed to "lapse."

WE trust that the following may find its way to the Political Agent at Jeypoor, who will doubtless stir up "the authorities," and ensure justice being done:—

The Gujrati's Jeypoor correspondent says that a Hindoo girl named Sonukoover, when about nine years of age, was married by her parents to a man about forty-five years of age for the sake of money. The husband died in about a year and a-half after the marriage, and the dowry which the girl had received on the occasion was lost by her father having had reverses in his trade. The father also died some time after, and the girl was left entirely by herself without any means of subsistence. She made overtures for re-marriage to a Hindoo named Motichand, but she was thwarted in her attempts. The matter having reached the ears of her late husband's relatives, she was arrested one evening by them on her way to her house, and taken away forcibly and confined in their house for three days without food or drink. She was then shorn of the hair on her head, and branded on several parts of her body. Her face was bedaubed with some thick dark paint, and she was tied hand and foot to a tree at some distance from the house. She was released on the following day from her sad predicament, but the authorities seem to take no notice of the matter. The poor intended husband was also subjected to a severe beating, and he and the unfortunate girl have been turned out of caste.

HOWEVER false rumours may be, they demand attention when they assume such a form as the subjoined, which we take from the Civil and Military Gazette:—

A Darjeeling correspondent says there are rumours of influence being brought to bear by the Nepalese on Thibet with a view to divert all trade from that country into the route through Nepal to the exclusion of the better and shorter route through Darjeeling, and the traders who have talked on the subject seem to think that this interference will be successful, and that the Darjeeling trade will suffer in consequence.

THERE appears to be a pretty general consensus of opinion in the Native Press against the Copyright Bill, by a clause in which newspapers are precluded from copying telegrams from other journals. Here are two utterances on the subject; a fair sample of all:—

We are exceedingly glad to observe that the Englishman has stood out against the Copyright Bill. There is no getting over the fact, that, if the Bill is passed, the Native press, which is still very backward, will be thrown into a worse state than ever, and that by the express act of Government. Surely Mr. Ilbert has not realised that to cut the whole Native press off from Reuter's news—which it cannot afford to pay for—is practically to condemn the press to labour in the dark.—Sonprokash.

We have shown that this legislation will be of no benefit to the English newspapers, and that it will prove injurious to Native papers. If Lord Dufferin passes the Bill at the instance of the English newspapers, his lordship will be responsible for the injury which will be done. It has always been customary that, as soon as any news has been published, it becomes public property, and we cannot see why Lord Dufferin should do away with that custom. It appears that the newspapers of the Bombay Presidency are in favour of the measure. We are glad to find that the Englishman takes such a statesmanlike view of the subject, and has protested so strongly against the Bill. We hope Lord Dufferin will lend ear to what that paper has said on the subject. We also hope that the Englishman will not be indifferent in the matter.—Bharathasi.

The Prokash recently had the following:—

The treaty which has been made between England and Russia is only for the time being. There is a possibility of its annulment at any moment. However, the English have become thus involved by demanding explanations from the Russians for their every action. The manner in which the English officials and the Anglo-Indians have treated the natives of India may have made the Russians imagine that the natives will revolt and join them if they can enter India. The English have created this uneasiness by displaying their own weakness.

HAPPY Madrassees! We read:—The result of recent correspondence between the Governments of India and Madras is, that "no information has been received regarding the issue of heavier ordnance for the beach batteries at Madras, but six machine guns will shortly be supplied by the Home Government. Meanwhile, the Naval Commander-in-Chief has fully considered the requirements of Madras, and has taken such measures as the means at his disposal (half-a-dozen obsolete vessels) will allow for the defence of Indian waters. And this is all the protection vouchsafed to a city numbering its inhabitants by hundreds of thousands, and presenting to an enemy's guns a sea front longer than those of Brighton or Hastings!

FORTUNATELY Sir W. Hewett, who has just returned from the East India Station, is at home; and (as Chairman of the lately formed Company of Samuda and Co.) likely to remain here. To no better authority could the Government appeal to learn what really ought to be done. Find it out, and do it, should be their motto.

WE have more than once remarked on the prohibition under which the Indian authorities lie to obtain for themselves, except through the cumbrous red-tape intervention of the India Office, articles which can be procured of excellent quality, and as cheaply, if not more cheaply, in India. We desire no better confirmation of our opinion than the subjoined statement, to which the Pioneer gives a prominent place, of the results attending even a partial relaxation of the preposterous prohibition. The list, which will, we hope, attract the serious attention of the Secretary of State, might unquestionably be greatly extended:—

A despatch from the Government of India in the Department of Finance and Commerce to the Secretary of State, dated June 20, is published, showing the expenditure on stores for 1883-84, and the extent to which articles of Indian manufacture were substituted for stores imported from England. Such substitution was 80 per cent. larger in 1883-84 than in 1882-83. Rs. 2,57,839 were saved in Bengal alone by the substitution of cinchona febrifuge for quinine. A saving of Rs. 7,72,763 was effected by the issue of Indian beer to the troops in the Bengal Presidency, and Rs. 35,194 by the purchase of Indian woollen goods. The total value of Indian stores substituted for those hitherto imported through the Secretary of State was Rs. 70,71,667 as against Rs. 39,42,421 in 1882-83; while the value of European stores purchased in India under the Resolution of January 10, 1883, was Rs. 65,18,916. Under the head of "Arms," the value of the stores imported through the Secretary of State was Rs. 4,46,267 as against Rs. 1,81,773 in the previous year—a significant increase. No arms were purchased in India in 1882-83.

Chit Chat.

THE story runs that some years ago a poor Native chanced to pick up in a village in Madras a small stone which glistened and looked pretty. He sold it for a trifle to another man, who was also struck by its appearance. That stone now fetches £18,000 as a diamond of the purest water. So the story runs.

To dismount, remove side-arms, sights, elevating screws, and all small stores, to haul a huge gun out of its trunnions and lower it down, to remove the wheels and let the carriage come to the ground—to do all this and re-do all back again in less than a minute seems magical, but it is done by British soldiers when they choose to put themselves into the work.

NATIVES are beginning to think themselves slighted when the prefix of "Mr." is used in place of "Esq." Be it so. Why not let them use both, and address them, as they sometimes address Englishmen, as "Mr. —, Esq."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE STORY OF NUNCOMAR.*

The fashion nowadays seems to be to "rehabilitate" damaged characters. Volumes have been published to show that Henry VIII. was justified in beheading Anne Boleyn, and more than justified in awarding the same measure to Catherine Howard. Nor have able writers been wanting to prove that Mary Queen of Scots was a paragon of virtue, no less than that she was, notwithstanding Mr. Froude's ungallant reference to her in his hideous description of her judicial murder, a paragon of loveliness. Oliver Cromwell has been, of late, generally acquitted of selling Englishmen into slavery, and William III. of the massacre of Glencoe.

Whatever be the worth of the allegations against these worthies, there is something to be said on both sides, and the facts are fairly well known.

In the case to which Sir James Stephen invites our attention in these volumes, the trial of the first and greatest of the Governors-General of India, matters stand differently. The entire facts have never been thoroughly investigated; and wherever their true bearings have been impartially appreciated, an emphatic verdict in favour of Warren Hastings has been recorded, a verdict the more trustworthy because more free from political bias, than that of the celebrated impeachment, in which "the judges walked, and the trial stood still."

But for Macaulay's passionate invective against Warren Hastings, it is probable enough that his impeachment might nowadays have excited an interest little less languid than that with which the condemnation of Byng, or the impeachment of Lord Melville, are regarded. But Macaulay's inimitable style has brought into the light—and very one-sided, and, therefore, misleading, light—almost every act of this great man.

Two of the most prominent charges against Hastings are his dealings with the Rohillas and with Nuncomar.

In Mr. Keene's careful history of Hindustan, recently reviewed in this journal, it was shown that the former charge, namely, that Hastings did, for filthy lucre, overwhelm the Rohillas with British troops, and hand them over to the tender mercies of a relentless potentate, was absolutely without foundation.

The dealings of Hastings and Impey as regards Nuncomar demand more careful consideration, inasmuch as they involve matters of law, with which, but for the researches and learned guidance of Sir J. Stephen, we should have felt ourselves incompetent to deal.

Sir James tells us, that, at the outset, he was inclined to investigate, from a lawyer's point of view, all the records connected with the impeachment of Hastings, to which that of Impey was, of course, subsidiary; but that he "found the materials so voluminous, and the subject so intricate," that it was doubtful whether the task could be completed in any reasonable time. He therefore resolved to "make the experiment of giving an account of one branch of the subject, the story of Nuncomar," which has never been thoroughly examined, though ample materials exist, and "the degree of interest" felt, in which "will be some index to the interest likely to be felt in the larger" subject.

Macaulay's charge is, that Hastings and Impey conspired, the one as Governor-General, to bring a trumped-up charge of forgery against Nuncomar; the other, as Chief Justice, to ensure his condemnation on that charge.

Clear it is, that the question, whether Impey unjustly condemned Nuncomar, depends on the further question, whether Hastings wanted Nuncomar condemned, and had influence enough over Impey to obtain an unjust condemnation, for nothing throughout the correspondence indicates that Impey had any grudge against Nuncomar. If, therefore, it cannot be shown that Hastings had, and exercised, influence over Impey in the matter of Nuncomar to ensure the condemnation of a presumably innocent man, and that Impey yielded to such influence, all the eloquence of Macaulay's brilliant periods will fail to substantiate his charge, and his fabric falls to pieces like a house of cards.

Sir J. Stephen undertakes to prove that the allegations, both against Hastings and against Impey, have no foundation in fact. As regards Impey, the documentary evidence is conclusive in his favour. As regards Hastings, written evidence is naturally not available. No one, most certainly no statesman of Hastings' calibre, would leave documentary proof of his complicity (had any such existed) in so base a conspiracy. But the narrative, as given, with every possible pièce justificative, by Sir J. Stephen, will ensure his triumphant acquittal, in foro conscientie, by any impartial judge.

The relations between the Governor-General and Nuncomar, which placed the two in a state of antagonism, dated from a period long anterior to that at which Hastings wielded the supreme authority in Bengal. In the early part of Hastings' career he was, says our author, "brought into relations with Nuncomar of an unfriendly kind," and these were assuredly not improved when the latter, having been employed (Vol. I., p. 11) by the express orders of the Court of Directors "to depose the Naib Nabobs and cause the Company to stand forth as Diwan," was deeply mortified by the posts which he had fully relied on filling being abolished by Hastings, and the duties belonging to them assigned to European officers.

The character of Hastings is described by Sir J. Stephen in an eloquent passage (Vol. I., p. 25). "If," says he, "a man's ability is measured by a comparison between his means of action and the results of his action, he must, I think, be regarded as the ablest Englishman of the eighteenth century." After quoting from Hastings' paper, read to the House of Lords in 1791, as to the services he had rendered to his country, and the manner in which they had been requited, Sir James turns for a moment to his character in private life. "Playful and gay to a degree hardly conceivable, of a temper so buoyant and elastic, that the instant he quitted the Council Board, where he had been assailed by every species of opposition, often heightened by personal acrimony, oblivious of these painful occurrences, he mixed in society like a youth on whom care never intruded," says Wraxall. "Few men," adds Sir James, "have been more devotedly loved. . . . He was probably as patient and sweet-tempered a man as ever lived, and it is also probable that no man's temper was ever tried more severely."

"Every schoolboy knows" by heart Macaulay's incomparably written character of Nuncomar, in which, his present critic says, "his rhetorical power greatly overcame the discriminating good sense shown in so many of his descriptions of character. . . . Of all the provinces of the Empire, none was so degraded as Bengal, and, till he was nearly sixty years old, Nuncomar lived in the worst and most degraded part of that unhappy province. A pushing, active, prominent, successful man in such circumstances could hardly be other than Nuncomar actually was, false all through, and dead to every sentiment except pride, hatred, and revenge."

A narrative of Nuncomar's career, which Sir J. Stephen has disinterred from among the letters of Barwell, the colleague and friend of Hastings, and which he "gives for what it is worth" (Vol. II., p. 273), presents a striking picture of the man's perseverance, versatility, and endurance; of the effeminacy imputed to him by the great essayist there is not a trace.

Of Impey and his colleagues the opinion of such an authority as our author is especially valuable. Remark, en passant, that he never has in actual life met with "fiends in human shape, or even with any of those parti-coloured monsters with characters like the pattern of a shepherd's plaid, half black, half white, which abound in Macaulay's histories," Sir James proceeds:—"He (Impey) was neither much blacker nor much whiter in whole or in part than his neighbours. He seems to me to have resembled closely many other judges whom I have known. He seems to have had an excellent education, both legal and general, to have been a man of remarkable energy and courage, and a great deal of rather commonplace ability. . . . I have read through all his letters and private papers, and I can discover in them no trace of corruption. He was obviously a zealous, warm-hearted man, much attached to his friends, but not the least likely to be made a tool of, or subservient to any one, and certainly not to Hastings, with whom at one time he had a violent quarrel."

Of the three puisne judges, Chambers (who succeeded Impey) "appears to me," says the author, "to have acted weakly" on several occasions, "Le Maistre to have been narrow-minded, arrogant, and violent, and little is to be said in favour of Hyde," whose mind would, indeed, appear (Vol. I., p. 37), at one time to have been affected, and of whose demeanour on the Bench his Chief complains. Impey and Chambers on one side, Le Maistre and Hyde on the other, seem usually to have acted together.

The Executive Council was not less a house divided against itself than was the Bench; Francis, Clavering, and Monson forming, as is well known, a standing majority against Hastings and Barwell.

Sir James Stephen gives the trial of Nuncomar very fully, and sets out the entire summing-up of the case by Sir Elijah Impey, of which we extract but a few lines. "You will," said the Chief Justice to the jury, "consider the whole (evidence) with that candour, impartiality, and attention which has (sic) been so visible in every one of you during the many days you have sat on this cause. You will consider on which side the weight of evidence lies, always remembering that in criminal, and more especially in capital cases, you must not weigh the evidence in golden scales; there ought to be a great difference of weight in the opposite scale before you find the prisoner guilty. . . . As there can be nothing of equal value to life, you should be thoroughly convinced that there does not remain a possibility of innocence before you give a verdict against the prisoner."

It is impossible to call this a summing-up against the accused; it was, on the contrary, strictly fair, and, if anything, favourable to Nuncomar, whose own defence it was which would seem to have led to his conviction. We cannot quote here a more authoritative opinion than that of our author. In his defence at the Bar of the Commons, Sir Elijah said (Vol. I., p. 186):—"Conscious as I am how much it was my intention to favour the prisoner in everything that was consistent with justice, wishing as I did that the facts might turn out favourable for an acquittal, it has appeared most wonderful to me that the execution of my purpose has so far differed from my intentions that any ingenuity could form an objection to my personal conduct as bearing hard on the prisoner." "My own earnest study of the trial," says Sir James, "has led me to the conviction that every word of this is absolutely true and just. . . . There is not a word in his summing-up of which I should have been ashamed had I said it myself, and all my study of the case has not suggested to me a single observation in Nuncomar's favour which is not noticed by Impey."

So much for the trial, and we are told in a letter from Barwell (Vol. II., p. 228) that he (Nuncomar) "conducted himself with decency, and at the place of execution acknowledged the justness of the sentence by which he suffered."

Oddly enough, Impey's summing-up was not one of the articles of the abortive attempt at his impeachment, urged on the Commons in 1788 (Vol. I., p. 171). The points raised against him having been, his trial of Nuncomar, who was alleged not to be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court under the Regulation Act, his having conspired with Hastings, and his refusal to respite the accused after conviction.

With the imputed conspiracy between Hastings and Impey we have already dealt. Sir J. Stephen (Vol. I., pp. 221-226) enters fully into the question, how far Nuncomar was amenable to English law for forgery or any other capital charge; and remarks that all objection to the jurisdiction (see p. 219) was withdrawn. Nuncomar's counsel, "Farrer, after consultation. . . . withdrew his plea to the jurisdiction." (Pp. 221; II., 16-37.)

The allegation that Impey refused to respite Nuncomar seems to be an assertion based on a misapprehension of facts. Impey disclaimed all recollection of any appeal, adding (p. 227) "that if there was one it must have been rejected for not showing any 'grounds of grievance.'" A petition was, indeed, prepared by Farrer for the signature of the jury; it was signed by one of them only; "and," says Sir J. Stephen, "as far as I can discover, this was the only petition for a respite which was presented to the Court in behalf of Nuncomar by any one whatever."

To the Council, however, one was sent, and Clavering—it will be remembered that Macaulay says Clavering swore Nuncomar should be rescued at the foot of the gallows—"without hesitation peremptorily refused (to apply to the Court), assigning as a reason that it was a private transaction. . . . had no relation to the public concerns of the country, which alone he was sent out to transact, and that he would not make any application in favour of a man who had been found guilty of forgery." A subsequent petition to the Council from the convict, sent through Francis, was (Vol. I., p. 256, II., 94) burnt by the jailor, no "common hangman" being available.

Sir James Stephen is deservedly severe on Francis, who, having it in his power to make what might probably, Sir James thinks, have been a successful appeal to the Court, refused to do so; and his remarks on Francis's conduct, not in this matter only, well deserve notice (Vol. II., pp. 94-101).

We have entered so fully into what may be called the title rôle of the work, the case of Nuncomar, that the other matters on which it was proposed to arraign Impey must be shortly dealt with.

First among these comes the allegation, that Impey laid claim to jurisdiction over every inhabitant of Bengal, and abandoned the legal jurisdiction of the Court on receiving a bribe in the shape of a lucrative appointment, tenable, but at the pleasure of the Governor-General, along with his permanent appointment as Chief Justice. Our author clearly shows from the correspondence, that all natives not in the employ of the Company were held not to be subject to the Court's jurisdiction, but they were required to state their exemption instead of simply ignoring the Court's existence. As regards Impey's acceptance of the office of Judge of the Sudder Court, there cannot be a doubt that it enabled him to regulate the procedure of the District Courts, and to codify the law. But there can be just as little doubt that his acceptance of an office held at pleasure did, to a great extent, compromise his independence, all the more so that his pecuniary position (Vol. II., p. 240) was of the weakest.

The circumstances of Hastings' visit to Benares, his encounter with Cheyte Sing, and his retirement to Chunar, are well known. On the Governor-General's return to Benares, he wrote to Impey, who, as Judge of the Sudder Court, was at Patna in course of visiting, at the request of the Government, the Provincial Courts of Justice, that "the country (Vol. II., p. 260) was quieted, and pressing him to come up to Benares." Hastings was preparing a narrative of his late proceedings; and "I advised him," says Impey, "to authenticate the facts as strongly as he possibly could. The only means of doing that, that suggested themselves to me, were the having them verified by affidavit. He then. . . . demanded of me whether I would take such affidavits, to which I assented."

Pointing out that an affidavit could (Vol. II., p. 267) have been taken by any one else, had it not been thought that Impey's high position would lend additional weight to those made before him, and that none of the forty-three affidavits (p. 264) taken by him were, in spite of Macaulay's doubly erroneous (p. 270) assertion, in languages which Impey did not know, though this (p. 265) was immaterial, Sir James Stephen effectually vindicates the Chief Justice from any imputation of "infamy," saying that "he was at the very worst a little officious, but willingness to take responsibility and to help the Governor-General in a difficulty, may also be described as a proof of courage and public spirit; what corrupt motive Impey had in his conduct in the matter no one has ever shown."

We consider the vindication in all points complete to the extent shown by the author, and Sir James Stephen is to be thanked for having placed in a true light the facts relating to a most interesting episode of history. We cannot but hope that we may yet see the complete review of the impeachment of Warren Hastings which Sir James Stephen originally designed, and out of his intention to publish which, this work, which we hope we may consider as only its first instalment, took its inception. We have neither space, nor, we fear, ability, to criticise in detail a work of which its author's name is sufficient recommendation, and the perusal of which has afforded us much both of interest and instruction.

A word of praise is due to the very elaborate Index, which enables the reader to find, at a glance, the salient points of a narrative, the very multiplicity of facts, in which, admirably arranged though they be in the text, might otherwise perplex a casual reader.

We think it right to observe, in this place, that an essay of which every statement which has been critically examined has been proved erroneous, as is the case with that of Macaulay on Warren Hastings, can be no fit text-book for Civil Service examinations. A text-book should teach facts to be remembered, not fictions to be refuted.

THE FIGHTING OF THE FUTURE.*

From a military point of view there can scarcely be a more momentous question than what is to be the fighting of the future. Captain Hamilton in his brochure strives to show that "firing" is the all-important consideration to which the attention of our Generals should be directed; he thinks that steadiness and accuracy of aim will go a long way to compensate for paucity of numbers, and suggests, that instead of, as at present, 300 days being devoted to drilling and ten to firing, the reverse should be the rule. He also makes several suggestions as to the technical points to be kept in view, warning, amongst other things, the authorities against the fatal error of making all the butts fixtures instead of introducing moving objects, so constructed, as to give the soldiers some idea of the difficulties of real warfare. It is scarcely within the province of this journal to criticise a subject which can only be settled by experts, but we commend the volume to the anxious consideration of all those charged with the administration of our army. Captain Hamilton is evidently a thoughtful student of the modern problems of war, and, as such, his ideas merit careful examination and reflection.

THE ILLUSTRATED NAVAL AND MILITARY MAGAZINE.

This journal, which comes out under the auspices of Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., maintains the high standard of excellence which has for a lengthened period characterised its pages. More especially the illustrations may be singled out as particularly worthy of commendation. It is seldom that in a magazine which appears at short periodical intervals such high-class pictures are to be found. The letterpress is equally satisfactory, whether as regards excellence of execution or the subject matters treated upon, and politics, too, are excluded from the pages of the journal, which latter, it may be hoped, will have a circulation commensurate with its merits.

THE ARMY AND NAVY CALENDAR.†

This valuable work gives nearly everything in the way of information which an officer of either service, whether stationed at home or abroad, can wish to have. It fully answers to its title, being really multum in parvo, as a compendium should be. The information comprises sufficiently full descriptions of the principal stations, indicating the barrack accommodation, with plans of many, and eighteen maps. The compiler has done his work right well, but he tells us that he intends doing yet better. He "hopes to get together, in the course of a few more editions, a complete series of maps of all important military stations, with plans of barracks," &c. The maps are to occupy one page, and the plans to be inserted below the statements of barrack accommodation. The work is corrected to the end of April, and bears every mark of care; we have indeed scarcely come across a misprint, though we may call attention to one at page 109, where officers are advised to take sail (instead of rail) from Malaga to Granada and Cordova—an error which is, however, obvious, and would mislead no one on the spot. The plans and maps are very distinct, and, so far as we know the places, accurate to a degree. Altogether, we may recommend the work as an indispensable vade mecum to every officer. It is a marvel how it can be produced at such a price as half-a-crown.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THE COUNCIL OF INDIA.

WHEN, in 1853, the Charter of the East India Company was renewed for the last time, the Directors had to perform a modified kind of Hari Kari, or happy despatch, being called on to select from among their body those who, with six Crown nominees, were to form the future Court of Directors. Directors still, but shorn of much of the patronage which mainly conducted to make the office valuable. When a Director no longer possessed the exclusive privilege of finding Indian berths for the offspring of his cousins, and his sisters and his aunts, à quoi bon, so reasoned some, to be a Director! These felt, with the overseer of old:—

"If you want lots of plague and vexation
You'll be"—an East India Director.

Nevertheless, great were the searchings of heart on the morning when the sacrifice had to be performed, and violent was the slamming of doors by some of the rejected.

Even greater was the change when, after the mutiny of 1857, the East India Company was abolished as a governing body, a second weeding out of the least useful members of its Court of Directors carried out, and the new "Council of India" appointed during pleasure, practically for life.

When the change from the Government of India by the Company to its direct administration by the Crown took place, the fear of nearly all who possessed any practical knowledge of the subject was twofold; that Indian affairs would become involved in the vortex of party squabbles in Parliament, the enormous patronage which India affords being prostituted to party uses; and that the revenues of our grand dependency might be improperly used for the carrying out designs wholly unconnected with its interests. Nor did the helpless and hopeless ignorance and cynical disregard of Indian affairs and interests by the vast majority of English public men escape notice.

This ignorance and disregard have, alas! continued undiminished, or nearly so. Parliament is commonly said to have the power of doing everything except making a man a woman; but we do, with great regret, aver our belief that not even an adverse vote—were such a thing conceivable on Indian affairs, it would probably be passed in a "House!" of some sixteen members, and would be void for lack of the prescribed number to make a quorum—would make the average Secretary for India pay really earnest attention to his work. Nor are our Native fellow-subjects, as an extract we recently inserted from the Hindoo Patriot shows, slow to perceive these things.

We have the greatest dependency in the world, and our so-called "statesmen," for the most part, either neglect it, or use its funds as a convenience.

Now, it was to counteract the all but inevitable ignorance of Indian affairs on the part of the Secretary of State, that the present Council of Indian experts was appointed, the majority being composed of men who had served at least ten years in India, and had quitted it but recently. They were, in ordinary matters, to be assessors, the decision ultimately resting with the Secretary of State. They occupied, relatively to him, much the same position as Agrippa did to Felix, when called in by that Proconsul to advise him, on St. Paul's preliminary trial, concerning points of Hebrew law and practice.

But, as regards finance, their powers were vastly more extended. No money from Indian revenues could be spent without their consent, except in the event of actual invasion or other sudden and urgent necessity, when the expense of military operations beyond the frontier require the sanction of Parliament before they can be defrayed from Indian revenues. These conditions, with the exception that, since 1870, the members are appointed for ten years only, hold good at the present time.

The ideal Council would, of course, consist of men who had, in India, come to the fore in the principal lines, those, that is, who are most experienced in matters affecting the land revenue and the other sources whence the exchequer is replenished, the administration of justice, the designing and carrying out of public works of all kinds, including railways, the administration of the army, the correspondence (or negotiations) with Native States, and last, but by no means least, the financial affairs of the territories ruled by the Kaiser-i-Hind.

Ever since the Crown took over the administration of India there has been a tendency to place this last, and most momentous, matter, in the hands of persons imported from England. The practice commenced with the sending out of Mr. Wilson, and his successor, Mr. Laing, and the present Finance Minister of India is an importation, and not a wholly successful one. Granted, that a war, or threatened war, may render it needful to recast a budget, and the Finance Minister would be blameless; avoidable errors in estimates, such as those to which we had occasion to advert when recently commenting on Lord R. Churchill's financial statement, which was, of course, founded on the Indian Budget, stand on a very different footing.

Now, it will be generally conceded, that this very Department, in which extraneous aid has been so largely used, is that in which the Government of India is, and remains, weakest, and in which least progress has been made. It is, therefore, that, in which the Council at home, invested as they are with especial control over the financial expenditure, ought to be exceptionally strong. It is well known that this has never been the case. It is not a subject to be overlooked when several vacancies have occurred, or are about shortly to occur, in the Council. A man such as, for instance, Sir G. Kellner, a practical manipulator of figures on a large scale, and a competent authority in matters of finance (though he could not be expected to resign a permanent post for one, in its nature, temporary), would be an acquisition to a consultative body, the value of which it would be difficult to overrate.

The Native Press are quite alive to the fact, that finance is the weak point of our Administration. They cannot understand why we fail to make both ends meet, though, naturally enough, the remedies they propose are of the crudest, one of them being a wholesale reduction of civil and military salaries. "English officials," says one paper, "who draw thirty or forty thousand rupees per annum are not even fit to receive three or four thousand rupees in England. It is sufficient to pay them Rs. 10,000 instead of Rs. 30,000. By this means the Government of India may make a saving of four or five crores of rupees annually." This is a fair specimen of the crudities which our Native fellow-subjects are taught to swallow whole, and for which, though their dissemination cannot be prevented, our financial administration should be such as to leave as little excuse as possible.

A Council at home, strong in finance members, would probably have a good deal to say on this subject; and present or approaching vacancies afford an opportunity of strengthening it which may not recur.

Among other papers, the Indian Daily News devotes a few remarks to the Council of India. It considers the present members as too much representing "an officialism which existed ere the nation awoke under the educational influences of the schoolmaster, the newspaper, the railway, the post-office and the telegraph; but the interests of the people of India ought not to be sacrificed to secure the ease and comfort of a dozen men who have retired from a service during their connection with which they enjoyed liberal salaries, and who, moreover, already have handsome pensions, unless they possess special qualifications and bring recent experience to the Council Board. . . . It may be safely affirmed that the Council would be greatly improved if it could have infused into it some higher percentage of non-official men."

We think these sentiments far too positive and far too strongly worded; and our contemporary overlooks the difficulty of procuring for a position, the duties of which, if properly and conscientiously performed, as they now are, occupy no inconsiderable proportion of each day, a first-rate man of business (no other would suffice), who wants all his time, and can make quintuple the salary of a Member of Council without leaving his beloved City, not to say that he must consent to be disqualified from holding, while Councillor, a seat in the Commons. Still, it may be possible to find such, and it is probably in this manner that financial strength and experience may best be gained.

One great, and, indeed, irreparable, loss the Council will, we much fear, soon sustain. With the retirement of Sir Henry Rawlinson it will lose a statesman whose political experience in Indian, Persian, and Central Asian matters is simply unique; a man who, though his vacancy will, we most earnestly trust, be, after due and careful consideration, creditably filled, can certainly not be replaced.

THE Shrivak community, says the Delhi Gazette, have decided to establish a Pinjrapole in Calcutta for diseased and infirm animals. Thirty thousand rupees have been subscribed in Calcutta, and forty thousand in Bombay. The institution will be supported by a voluntary monthly tax.

WHAT an odd place Ceylon must be—even carbonate of soda can't be got there without a written medical order! It is (vide Times of Ceylon of July 20th) "not included in list of medicines procurable in terms of regulation." Yet the Doctor Sahib had ordered it (verbally, however) to be taken with the medicine. Are the Ceylon people as particular as to the supply of soda water to be fizzingly associated with brandy? or are they benighted enough to think carbonate of soda a poison?

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, Sept. 1st.; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, August 30th.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs, under yesterday's date, as follows :—

The Indian Government has received news that the telegraph line is to be extended to Bokhara and to Merv, that trains now run to Kizil-Arvat, and that the Askabad railway is being pushed on and is being constructed sectionally, the earthwork having been finished in many places, though the rails are not laid.

The Russian telegraph system is now so near to India that it would be a comparatively easy task to join it to the Indian system, thus giving an overland line from Calcutta to Europe. If only the Ameer could be induced to ask for lines to Cabul and Candahar, the Indian telegraph department could construct them without difficulty, and an important step would have been taken towards the establishment of a through overland line. Even if a through line were not yet carried out, still it is impossible to overestimate the importance of having direct communication between the Viceroy and the Ameer and between the Ameer and the Governor of Candahar, while a telegraph station at the latter place would enable news from Herat to reach India in three days, supposing the post messengers travelled only five miles an hour. If a portion of the breathing time which we seem likely to have before the next Russian advance were spent in making these lines, and in constructing the earthwork for a railway from Chaman to Candahar, we could then await the further development of the Central Asian question with more equanimity than will be possible in the absence of such precautions.

It is believed that four survey parties will be detailed for work on the new military road from Dera-Ghazi-Khan to Pishin.

Rumours continue to reach India of Russian intrigues in Afghan Turkestan and the neighbourhood of Herat; but it is said that the agents, who are supposed to be commissioned by Colonel Alikhanoff, have met with little success.

It seems likely that the Ameer will not visit Afghan Turkestan this year.

We do not agree with the correspondent as to joining our telegraphs to those of Asiatic Russia, where they would, to use a technical phrase, assuredly be "tapped," and the purport of most important messages learnt. To have a communication with Kabul is quite another matter, and one well worth serious endeavours to bring about its realisation.

A COMPLIMENTARY and laudatory notice of the late Maharajah of Kashmir is published in a Gazette Extraordinary by the Government of India.

THE subsidence of the disastrous floods in Bengal is confirmed, but the accounts of the ravages caused by them are heartrending. It seems, however, to be the general opinion of the Revenue officers that, although there will doubtless be considerable distress for some months, it will not be of a prolonged character, as the floods will have a beneficial effect on the rubbee crop, which consists of grain other than rice, and is reaped in February. Meanwhile the price of rice is rising. The Bengal Chamber of Commerce proposes to start a relief subscription, and several donations have already been received.

WE greatly fear that all warnings against leaving other nations to have their own way in Upper Burma, unwatched and unchecked by the presence of a British officer, have been neglected until it is too late. Both the Times and Reuter have telegrams from Rangoon which indicate that the French have obtained a firm footing. They boast, it is said, that we can now do nothing at Mandalay without their permission :—

The following are the provisions of the secret treaty between France and Burmah :—

France is granted the exclusive concession for the construction of railways in Upper Burmah. The Burmese Government guarantees 7½ per cent. on the outlay for the construction of the line between Mandalay and Tonghoo. The French Government to control the customs receipts on the Irrawaddy route as security for the interest, any surplus to be paid to Burmah.

The treaty also empowers the French Government to establish a bank at Mandalay with a capital of 250 lakhs of rupees, half the shares to be taken by France, and half by Burmah. The French Government to have the control of the customs revenue from the tea trade, and the working of the Ruby mines, as security for the bank capital advanced.

The treaty includes a demand of the King of Burmah upon the Bombay and Burmah Trading Company for a sum of twenty-three lakhs, and provides that, in case of non-compliance, their forests will be confiscated.

It is stated that the Burmese Government will be willing to receive a British Resident, but it objects to his bringing an escort.

The famine in Upper Burmah will be severe and widespread. No rain has fallen in the belt extending from sixty miles beyond Mandalay to within forty miles of the British frontier. The rice and other crops have wholly failed.

NATIVE papers still find somewhat to say about the lately threatened war :—

The apprehensions (says the Charuvar) of war have already narrowed the means of improvement. The public works have, in a manner, been stopped. Retrenchments are being made in the Education Department. There will be no end of miseries if war breaks out. It will be a very hard thing for the people of India, after they have, in a manner, been deprived of everything they possessed by famine and diseases, to have to bear the charges for such a war.

The people of India wish that the prestige of England should be maintained, but not that war should be undertaken unnecessarily. We beg to say one thing. In case of war the loyalty of the people will be greatly needed. If hostilities break out the Government and the people should act unitedly.—The Someprokash.

The English Government may try their best, but they will not be able to check the advance of Russia. The Russians have had a longing for India since the time of Peter the Great, and in order to gratify that desire, they have advanced to Afghanistan, across mountains, rivers, lakes, and deserts, disregarding all difficulties and expenses. Either to-day or to-morrow the Russians will try their best for the occupation of India. Taking these things into consideration, the English ought to proceed prudently. No treaty that may be made will prevent the Russians from invading India.—The Shamaya.

THE Copyright Bill is gall and wormwood to the Native Press :—

A question (says the Voice of India) that has acquired due importance this time is that relating to the Copyright Bill, to one of the clauses of which at least, in its present shape, the Native journals are unanimously opposed. They consider the measure unnecessary and obviously one-sided. The point to be considered in this discussion is, that, if the Bill became law, it would operate mainly as a check on the progressive development of the Vernacular Press. There is no such law, they urge, even in England and America. Another good reason advanced in favour of the Native Press is its general poverty. But the main principle that they insist upon is the object of protection, which should rather be used in favour of the weak rather than the strong, the masses in general rather than particular interests. In short, the proposed monopoly is opposed even by those of the Native papers which never profit by the present state of the law. It is interesting to see how cordially Native writers commend the attitude of the Englishman, and point to it as the only interested party which is disinterested enough to view the question in a public spirit.

Under the difficulties with which Native journalists have to contend, between the inadequate support they receive from the masses, on the one hand, and the jealousy of executive officials generally on the other, the assurances received from Lord Dufferin are considered most encouraging. They are not slow in appreciating the compliment paid them in the declaration by the Viceroy that he is a regular reader of the Native newspapers, which he considers as the channel through which genuine Native public opinion can best reach Government. In fact, this is an avowal that the journals have commented upon with enthusiasm. They trust his Excellency will not stop short there in his benevolent intentions, but do something towards showing his confidence actively in the Native Press.

The English newspapers which advocate the protection of telegrams very well know that they have no real right in them. The very fact of their purchasing the telegram with money cannot make them proprietors. The purchase of a book by any one for a certain amount cannot vest that purchaser with copyright in that book. Reuter sends the telegrams, and he alone can claim copyright. Why, then, should the English papers be vested with the right which belongs to Reuter?—The Sangbad Provakar.

It has been for some time in contemplation to afford to Indian officers some inducement to study Russian. The following are stated by the St. James's Gazette to be the conditions of the offer:—

An order is about to be published by the India Office, under which any officer of the India Staff Corps who may have passed a qualifying examination, in England, in the Russian language, will be allowed to go to Russia for nine months, during which time he will receive the Indian pay of his rank, plus half staff allowances. Moreover, his travelling expenses will be paid; and if on his return he passes another and tougher examination in the Russian language, he will receive £200. Now this is as it should be. It is an excellent plan. But what the Indian Government has resolved to do the Home Government refuses to imitate.

A CORRESPONDENT writing from Tashkent to the Russ states that the army of Turkestan, exclusive of fortress garrisons, now comprises thirty battalions of infantry, six regiments of Cossack cavalry, and ten batteries of artillery. The Tashkent garrison is composed of four battalions of riflemen, four of the line, five regiments of Cossacks, and three batteries with twenty-four guns.

TELEGRAMS received from the Transcaspian state that the railway extension to Askabad and further is being hurried on at the rate of two miles of rails laid down per day. It is added that preparations are already being made at Tashkend for the line that is to run through Bokhara.

THE new fortifications at Aden, says the Englishman, the cost of which is to be borne partly by the Home and partly by the Indian Government, comprise the reconstruction of the two forts, Tarshyne and Morbat, commanding the entrance to the harbour. The new scheme covers more ground than before, in order to separate the guns, each gun having its magazine close to it, below ground, and with galleries of communication extending all round the work. Both forts are to be entirely self-contained, with ample provision for storage of water and stores, also bomb-proof covering for the garrison. In Fort Tarshyne the greater part of the rock excavation is completed, and some of the masonry work is in hand. In Fort Morbat a good deal of scarping and ditch work has been got out, also the preliminary work of erecting sheds. Mortar mills and setting up profiles are well advanced.

HERE is a protest—one of several—against the passing of the Tenancy Act. It was reported from Calcutta, under date Sept. 11, that the Lieutenant-Governor has refused to defer its introduction for a year:—

We pray to God for the forgiveness of those who are rejoicing on the passing of the Tenancy Act. If they had really understood the new Act, they would have shed tears, and would not have expressed satisfaction. Mr. Thompson has widened the gulf between the Anglo-Indians and natives, the Government and the people, and the Hindus and Muhammadans. The law as framed by him will by no means prove beneficial. We hope those who profess to be the real friends of the rayats will carefully read the new Tenancy Act, and when they understand it, they will understand the offence they have committed.—The Ananda Bazar Patrika.

THE Englishman says:—

Arrangements are being made under the orders of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India, the Governments of Madras, Bombay, and the Punjab for the despatch to Calcutta of certain soldiers of the Native Armies with the view of being modelled for the Indo-Colonial Exhibition to be held in London in 1886. The soldiers will proceed to Calcutta in groups at intervals, and will be furnished by the following regiments:—11th, 15th, and 20th Bengal Infantry, 3rd Goorkhas, 3rd Sikh Infantry, Malwa Bheel Corps, Mhairwara Battalion, Deolee Infantry, Viceroy's Body Guard, 3rd Bengal Cavalry, 11th Bengal Lancers, 1st Punjab Cavalry, 1st Central India Horse, and Deolee Cavalry; Kohat Mountain Battery of Native Artillery, Madras Sappers and Miners, Madras Cavalry and Infantry, 5th and 29th Regiments Bombay Infantry, 2nd Bombay Lancers, and Indian Marine Seamen.

It seems an absurd proposal to model soldiers of the Native Army at Calcutta to be displayed at the Exhibition next year. If this must be, why not supplement it by sending over a few originals? It would not be difficult, nor costly; it would be a thing to be looked forward to, and looked back on, by the deserving few who might be selected to make the journey under an officer. Many an old Indian in London would willingly help an officer so appointed. And that the political effect would be excellent no one could doubt who knows India and its Natives.

COMPLAINTS of high salaries given to Government servants are not unknown in England; they may be heard at every Radical meeting, and figure in every protest against "the Stores." We are not surprised to meet with them in India. The following is by no means the first utterance on the subject which has of late come under our notice. The Bharatbasi says:—

Russia possesses the greater number of troops, and may bring ten lacs of soldiers into Central Asia if she chooses. Our Government do not possess more than three lacs of troops. It is, therefore, inexpedient to fight the Russians outside the frontiers of India. The frontier ought to be made impregnable by erecting forts. If the Government erect forts on the line between Peshawar and Karachee and post 25,000 Europeans and 50,000 Native troops in them, then, even if Afghans and Russians combine, they will be able to do no harm. This arrangement will cost three or four crores of rupees annually, and England ought to bear a portion of the expenses. The Government of India should reduce the salaries of the civil and military officials. Nowadays, the English officials who draw thirty or forty thousand rupees per annum are not even fit to receive three or four thousand rupees in England. It is sufficient to pay them Rs. 10,000 instead of Rs. 30,000. By this means the Government of India may make a saving of four or five crores of rupees annually.

A PARLIAMENTARY return has just been issued by the India Office showing the working of the new scheme for the college at Cooper's-hill during the last two years, the annual expenditure and receipts, the number of students who have entered the college since its foundation, and of those who have received appointments as civil engineers in India, together with the cost per head of the education of the students. The scale of fees is now £180, instead of £150 a year, as formerly. The number of students in the college on July 18 of this year, the date of the report, was 105; and in the last two years, out of 116 candidates who have presented themselves, ninety-nine entered the college after examination. Thirty appointments were made in the same time, of which twenty-six were to the Public Works and four to the Telegraph Department. It appears that the average cost to India of each student during his three years' residence is £69 per annum.

PEOPLE ought to be careful with whom they associate while on their travels. Here is the present Earl Cairns found to have been shooting in Kashmir—so says the Bombay Gazette—with one Speechly, who has been "had up" before a magistrate at Cuddapah for receiving bribes while in Government service. The late Lord Garmoye had better be careful whom he cottons to.

AN amusing account is given of the French Sepoys at Pondicherry. It seems that they are paid twice a month, and that for some days after getting their pay they are—well, not sober. This went on for some little time, till another governor came in Felix' room, and didn't quite see it. Giving orders for the men to expect a sudden call, he waited for five days, and then—on a Sunday, too—summoned them for inspection. In what state they arrived deponent (the Bombay Gazette) sayeth not.

THE block in the High Court, says the Indu Prakash, has become a standing grievance. There is such an accumulation of work, at both the original and the appellate sides, that it seems the judges find it impossible to overtake it. The judges have themselves, we understand, asked for an additional judge when they were asked to report what retrenchments they could make in their department, but it seems scarcely possible that Government, in their present temper of economy, will accept the proposal. What other schemes should be devised to reduce the work of the judges has exercised the minds of many people for days past. The only plans feasible are increasing the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court, appointing a District Judge or a First-class Subordinate Judge, or appointing a Master in the High Court with power to dispose of undisputed and petty matters. Any of these plans, the second particularly, will effect the desired reduction in original work. The new Bankruptcy Bill provides for some of the insolvency work to be transferred to a judge of the Small Cause Court. In that case there will be some further diminution of work. This reduction of work may disengage one judge of the Original Side for Appellate Side work, who may assist in clearing off the block there. The plan of one judge alone hearing appeals which seems to prevail at Calcutta may be usefully tried here (Bombay).

We fear that Manchester will be too strong for the Akhbare Soudagar, with whom we are inclined very much to agree :—

The total abolition (says the Soudagar) of import duties for the benefit of the Manchester-wallahs has done no good to the Indian public. Now when the Government of India are looking about to see how money can be raised to meet the expenditure of strengthening our position against the probable Russian advance, it would not be out of place to suggest that the only tax which the Indian public are likely to accept without a murmur is the import duty on piece goods. The Manchester people have been disappointed in their expectations that the sale of English piece-goods in India would be improved by the abolition of the impost. It is not likely that the present Secretary of State would care to displease the Manchester men at the present moment. It is therefore our duty to strengthen his hands by demanding from our side that the duty be reimposed.

Chit Chat.

A GOVERNMENT official recently requested a Hindu Priest to leave a first-class carriage and go to a second whilst a friend and himself breakfasted. Not bad that for a youngster barely out of his teens.

BOMBAY has been gushing because a poor engine driver who had served his sentence of one month's imprisonment and had been set at liberty was again sent to jail, because the High Court had enhanced the sentence. Cert inly this seems funny justice, and one would have thought the matter might have been settled before the prisoner had been set free.

THE Parsees and the Salvationists do not seem to agree. So when the latter established themselves at the Kenney Caves near Bombay, the Custodians peremptorily gave them notice to quit. The reason why the men of piety betook themselves to a jungle life was that the young "cadets" were apt to be led away by the allurements of town life. So they are taken to the solitudes of nature till inured to a life of self-denial and hardships.

THE Viceroy of India has entered his name as a competitor in the forthcoming tennis match at the Viceregal Court, Simla. Fancy beating the Queen's representative!

SIR WILLIAM ANDREW some time ago offered a prize of Rs. 500 for a translation of our National Anthem into Hindustani. The award has now been made, and the honorarium has passed, not into the hands of one of India's poets, but to a humble clerk at Lahore!

To beat one's wife to death because dinner is unpunctual is somewhat alarming ferocity, but to get only three months' imprisonment seems a premium upon bad temper. Perhaps Poona morality, however, differs from its namesake in England.

POONA boasts of a Tandem Club, but on the occasion of the last "meet" but two "turns-out" put in an appearance, while the spectators numbered seven men, women, and children—all told.

WHY when there is a ball, and the grounds are lit up with Chinese lanterns, does the wind blow out the latter luxuries as the evening advances? Why, too, are "proposals" best made in the dark?

POONA is exultant, Bombay having been beaten by one wicket at the annual cricket match of the season. The excitement when "last man" went in was prodigious, and when a tie was hoisted up, the frantic frenzy of the people of the city of the Peishwas knew no bounds, but when a "snick to leg" won the match they fairly screamed themselves hoarse.

KASHMIR has been a week without an earthquake, so people are in ecstasies.

WHAT a fine thing to be a doctor, and prescribe the following treatment for a patient you do not like. First, give a tremendous dose of laudanum, then bleed the person, then order him to walk about violently to work off the effects of the laudanum; finally, to keep him awake, beat his feet with sticks till the skin peels off. Then—well, he dies. Such was the treatment prescribed in England, in the year of grace 1857, to a distinguished member of the British aristocracy.

CHAMPANER in Guzerat was once a flourishing city, embellished with fine streets and beautiful houses. Now its air is weakening, its water poisonous, and its orchards and gardens the lair of the lion and tiger. Its buildings have fallen into ruin, and the possessions of its people been scattered to the winds of heaven. What changes time brings in its course!

CHASING a log of timber instead of navigating one's vessel with care and diligence is doubtless exciting, but when such pastime lands the pursuing vessel on a mud bank and she is wrecked the case becomes serious. So Captain "Du Pedro" found to his cost when navigating the Romola on the Ganges.

THE Viceroy has constituted three grades of distinction for the Burmese. But who can remember them? (1) Thuye gaung ngwe da ya min. (2) Kyet thaye yaung shue Salwe ya min (3) Asmudan gaung tazeik ya min. Happily we are not Burmese.

WHAT an economical race are the French! At Pondicherry they have a "Capitaine de Port," with a Lieutenant and "Sous Chief," for the pier, as well as twenty other minor officers. The total expenditure to be divided among all the lot is £934 per annum. Yet the work is well done.

WHY when an Anglo-Indian wants to get a seat in Parliament does he talk nonsense about the land of Ind? Fancy calmly trying to persuade the audience that the Native States in India govern more benignly than does the Queen Empress! God preserve us from such "robust Liberal" doctrines. Yet the exalted patriot who holds this opinion condescends to wear a badge of honours given him by the Queen whose rule he despises.

MOST people are aware that the common "pyrethrum" in our gardens smells disagreeable, but it is not generally known that its flowers, dried and pulverised, are a fairly good insecticide.

"WHAT is milk?" Such was the subject of Mr. McConnell's lecture to some students at South Kensington. But does he know himself? Of course, he is aware what it should be, but that is not always what it is.

THE Statesman says: "Who believes for one moment that Sir John Strachey approved of the late Afghan War? But he assisted it forward without a scruple." Surely this is scarcely fair to impute dishonesty which cannot be proved. But there, we do not suppose Sir John cares much. Why should he?

THE CONGO.*

CENTRAL Africa! the very name conjures up a phantom of disease, desolation, and death—the land is pictured as rank with vegetation, the air impregnated with miasmas, to breathe which is fatal to the strongest constitutions, while the water—well, the mere mention of it suffices—to drink impurity is nauseous, even in imagination. Such is Central Africa in ideal—what is it in reality? The two volumes before us tell a very different story. Let us listen to their teachings.

Some years ago a body of philanthropists, with the King of the Belgians at their head, formed an association with the object of opening to commerce and Christian missions the regions of Africa bordering upon the Congo river. This enterprise, noble in its inception and destined to be colonial in its results, was from the first "international," absolutely void of any germ of nationality. Its members comprised representatives of well nigh every civilised country in Europe—a motley array, but united by one common bond of fellowship, the desire to emancipate a land from the thralldom of ignorance, and to dispel the cloud of darkness which enveloped a vast and undefined region of the world. The leader chosen as the pioneer of commerce was the well known traveller, Henry M. Stanley, whose efforts to reach Livingston had marked him out as a man of enterprise, energy, and resource. His followers were mostly Zanzibaris, a large part of whom had been tempered and tried in a former journey to the same territory. In August, 1879, the little band, hopeful and resolute, sighted the entrance to the Congo, a river the hugeness of which may be gathered from the fact that in the rainy season it discharges into the ocean the astounding quantity of 2,530,000 cubic feet of water every second of time. Placing their paraphernalia on a small steam launch, the expedition at once commenced their enterprise. Let us glance at their operations while they formed their first settlement at Vivi. The spot selected was on a hill, and this necessitated the construction of a road to the beach, a distance of 1,965 feet. So on the 16th, 1879, the sound of pickaxes, sledge hammers, and various other implements betokened that the work had commenced in right good earnest. But what a labour! Rocks had to be pounded, for blasting was beyond the skill of the party; stones had to be removed, earth shovelled from place to place, eminences smoothed down, trees removed—in a word, a huge engineering feat had to be accomplished. But success crowned their efforts, and in the end the astonished natives—many of them had helped in the undertaking—stood awe-struck as they contemplated the change which the genius of man had wrought. Henceforth the name of Stanley was set aside, and throughout the length and breadth of Equatorial Africa that traveller became known as “Bula Mutari,” the “breaker of stones.” The road finished, the ground had to be cleared of vegetation and levelled preparatory to the construction of a station house—the latter, a neat, tidy erection, resembling a two-storied chalet, with cellar beneath for wine, beer, liquor, and tinned provisions. Nay more, a garden was formed, and no less than 2,000 tons of earth were brought by hand to form soil wherein to plant the homely seeds of Europe; but the reward came, and in a few weeks carrots, onions, lettuces, parsnips, turnips, cabbage, and the like graced the table of the expedition. Thus was created the first station and the headquarters of the “Association.”

But the labour thus far, great as it had been, was but a tithe of what was to follow; for the record of a year's work of exploration higher up the river is that, computing the various marchings and counter-marchings, the astonishing distance of 2,352 miles had been traversed, and yet the advance into the interior had been but fifty-two miles! It will not create astonishment that the bleaching bones of six Europeans, and twenty-two natives, coupled with the retirement of thirteen invalid whites, told in unmistakable language how arduous and perilous had been the enterprise. Still, onward they pushed with their “smoke boat,” as the natives termed the steam launch, a “demon” so terrible to the befrighted fishermen of the river that one man jumped overboard from his frail craft, so bewildered was he at the strange boat which he saw bearing down upon him. The scenery was magnificent, so grand, indeed, that Stanley breaks forth into raptures. “The Hudson, the Indus, the Ganges, the Irawaddy, the Euphrates, the Nile, the Niger, the La Plate, the Amazon—I think of them all, and I can see no beauty on their shores that is not excelled manifold by the natural beauty of the scenery, which, since the Congo highlands were first fractured by volcanic caprice or by some wild earthquake, has remained unknown, unhonoured, and unsung.” Station after station was founded, but as time wore on prudence whispered into the ear of “Bula Mutari” that a return for a while to the cooler regions of Europe was necessary; so towards the middle of 1882 Stanley turned his back on the scene of his triumphs, and laid in a stock of health preparatory to a renewal of the enterprise. He had been charged to erect three stations, to launch a steamer on the Congo, and to keep open communication with the sea. But he had done more than had been required at his hands. At five stations the Association flag waved proudly but humbly as a token of peace and goodwill, a steamer and a sailing boat traversed the waters of the huge river, while another “smoke-boat” and a lighter passed from station to station.

A few months sojourn and rest in Europe sufficed for Stanley; and ere the year 1882 had been enrolled in the past, he once again set foot on the shores of the Congo. To follow him in all his attempts and his failures, to record but a fragment of his daily efforts, would fill a volume. Suffice it to say that he succeeded in reaching “Stanley Pool,” 3,034 miles from the coast. There he founded a Station, which he left in charge of a little Scotchman named Binnie, a noble youth who had quitted the workshop of his native land “to win bread for his old mother,” and turning his back on the scenes of his triumph “Bula Mutari” set his face towards home.

Years had elapsed since he commenced his task, and as he journeyed from station to station, pondering and reflecting on all that had happened, he could feel with pride that he had succeeded. True, in some instances the incompetency of those in charge had led to trouble and disaster; true, some spots had been badly chosen, but on the whole the Congo had been explored and opened out to commerce; nay more, Christian zeal had sent messengers to preach and teach the message of great joy, and equatorial Africa had been added to the list of places on the earth where the Gospel of peace is proclaimed to the heathen worshippers of blocks of wood and stone.

On his return to Europe, a conference was assembled at Berlin to discuss matters relating to Stanley's expedition, and in the end to give the Association the moral support conferred by its recognition on the part of the several nations of Europe as an international body unconnected with country, race, or people. The Congo had thereby become a Free State—free in the fullest sense of the word, alike politically as practically—and amongst the triumphs of this nineteenth century must be numbered the successful attempt of the “International Commission for the Navigation of the Congo” to found a colony in Equatorial Africa, a region as it had been thought of pestilential miasmas and deadly exhalations; but in reality a land “flowing in milk and honey,” a zone of unsurpassed richness and inexhaustible fertility, by no means unsuited to the constitution of the “white faces,” an opening for commerce and an outlet for enterprise. All honour to the Association; all honour to the “Bula Mutari.” In the words of one of England's grand old poems:—

Dropped into life's dry well,
The good, the joy, that it may bring,
Eternity shall tell.”

THE ROYAL MAIL.*

This work, dedicated to the late Mr. Fawcett, when Postmaster-General, but published after his lamented death, is of the highest interest; and the circumstance, that a few of the facts it contains have been from time to time referred to in the Annual Post Office Reports—the only readable books, so far as we are aware, which are issued by the State—has, as is shown by the speedy call for a second edition, only served to whet the public appetite for yet more of the curiosities and romantic incidents with which postal annals abound.

The “old roads,” “postboys,” and “stage and mail coaches,” which are the titles of the first three chapters, furnish, as might be supposed, much interesting matter. Macaulay's celebrated third chapter of his fragment of the History of England will have prepared readers to hear that our ancestors were not blessed with means of rapid communication. To nearly every road might have been applied the old ditty:—

“Had you seen these roads before they were made,
You would lift up your hands and bless General Wade.”

But some roads would have beaten even the sappers and miners of that celebrated commander. Here, we take it, is one of them. Arthur Young, the great agriculturist, whose book on husbandry has, even in these days of high farming and artificial manures, scarcely ceased to be reckoned a standard work, thus writes in the middle of the eighteenth century:—“The going down into Cleveland is beyond all description terrible, for you go through such steep, rough, narrow, rocky precipices, that I would sincerely advise any friend to go 100 miles to escape it. The name of this path is very judicious, Scarthneck—that is, Scare-Nick, or, frighten the Devil.” Even when improved roads were, with much difficulty—not the least being the portentous necessity of passing no less than 452 Acts of Parliament in the four years 1760-4—constructed, people literally “stood on the old ways;” and even the driver of the Marlborough coach, in the true spirit of dogged aversion to improvements, “obstinately refused” to travel the newly-made Bath road, “and stuck to the old waggon-track.” “He was an old man,” he said; “his grandfather and father had driven the aforesaid way before him, and he would continue in the old track till death.” It is not surprising that letters were mostly conveyed over such tracks on foot, or by mounted postboys; but the boys were “a source of great trouble and vexation.” At Salisbury, and, no doubt, elsewhere, they carried “bye letters”—those, that is, on which no postage had been paid. One young rascal was flogged and dismissed—“but the next day the same rider came post, ran about the city for letters, and was insolent.” Sometimes people got their own letters back again: “The bag despatched on a Saturday night being returned the second Sunday after, 'tis reckoned this mistake happened about half-way on the road.” Against these cases of misconduct, and against some of occasional robbery, may fairly be set a splendid instance of devotion to duty. On the 1st February, 1831, the guard and coachman of the mail from Dumfries to Edinburgh found, that, owing to a heavy fall of snow, the horses could not perform the journey, so, stopping at a place which bore the ominous name of the “Devil's Beef-tub,” they were sent back, and the two brave fellows undertook the rest of the journey on foot. “The exact particulars,” says Mr. Hyde, “will never be known, beyond this—that the mail bags were afterwards found tied to one of the road posts” set up to mark the track, “and that the two men perished in the drift. The last act performed by them, before being quite overcome by exhaustion and fatigue, was inspired by a sense of duty, their aim being to leave the bags where they would more readily be found by others, should they themselves not live to recover them.” The bodies of these two men, James McGeorge and John Goodfellow (their names deserve to be recorded) were found 100 yards from the spot “where, at the cost of their lives, they had rendered their last service to the Post Office and their country.”

The procession of all the coaches on the Sovereign's birthday is well described at p. 73, and the appropriate tune “Oh, dear, what can the matter be?” with which a mail arriving after its time, and chancing to meet the procession, was greeted, tickles us vastly.

Passing many amusing anecdotes about the foot post-carriers (whose lot was, however, a very hard one, carrying, as some (p. 79) did, two or three stones' weight on a wage of 5s. weekly, and this through all weathers), and the gradual improvements of the mail packets, which form Chapters IV., V., and VI., we come to some statistics in Chapter VII. With these we need not trouble our readers, though it will be news to some that in 1883 the Post Office despatched 1,853 millions of letters, &c., a number doubtless exceeded in the ensuing year, but containing, says Mr. Hyde, enough paper to make a pathway, one and a-half yards wide, to the moon. But of these no less than half a million came back, being, from one cause or another, not delivered. That Valentines are falling off, and the Christmas cards increasing, in number, one would have anticipated.

We have more than once advocated the employment in war of pigeons. This is one of the many points in which we are quite behind nearly every other European army. It would seem that some of our Colonies, at least, are alive to the importance of this means of communication for commercial, if not for warlike, purposes, and its gradual extension to other colonies besides Fiji is not likely to be long delayed. It might seem strange to have (as at p. 173) a column of newspaper headed "Latest news, by pigeon post," but, with telegraphs cut, no better means of conveying news could well be devised, and the "Intelligence" Department should by no means despise its utility in case of need.

The committal, and detection, of frauds on the post-office, to which the next chapter is devoted, is less interesting than that headed "Strange Addresses" (Chap. XIV.). The spelling versus the pronunciation of English is an old story; but allowing for all that has been said on the subject, few will be prepared to hear that no less than fifty-seven ways of misspelling so simple a word as Ipswich (all given on p. 191) have been discovered. This matter of misspelt addresses displays an amount of what would almost seem a kind of perverse ingenuity, which, however, appears rarely to baffle the practised readers at the post-office, gentlemen who, for some inscrutable reason, rejoice in the appellation of "blind officers." "John 7." for Johnshaven, reminds one of Artemus Ward's "going 2 a shop be 4 he did anything else." But an address, "To my dear Aunt Sue, who lives in a cottage by the wood in the New Forest," or "To my sister Jane, up the Canon-gate, down a close, Edinburgh. She has a wooden leg," might have been thought puzzling, yet both letters were duly delivered. Sometimes ear does what eye fails in accomplishing, and "Mr. Owl O'Neil, General Post-office," might have remained a standing enigma, but that one clerk, hearing another pronouncing it aloud, burst in with "Why, that must be intended for Mr. Rowland Hill," which, indeed, proved to be the case. This subject is illustrated with admirably-executed cuts, being fac-similes of more than usually bizarre addresses, and is, perhaps, as diverting as any in the book.

We believe that it is rank casuistry to hold that one may do evil that good may be the result; but if ever such a thing could be said, it would surely be of the romantic theft by a daughter (p. 214) of the warrant for her father's execution, which she obtained by donning male attire, and stopping, pistol in hand, the post-boy whose bag contained it. A case in which a mailbag, stolen by a footpad in 1798, was recovered in pulling down, in 1876, an old public-house, is interesting (p. 223), "as somewhat proving the suggestion put forward by Smollett in 'Roderick Random' as to the intimate relations which existed between the personnel of the innkeepers and the common highwayman."

The loss of letters in all sorts of ways is matter of common remark, but the extraordinary well-authenticated instances given at length in the chapter on this head will, we think, be entirely new to most readers. People who complain (p. 304) of being kept awake by telegraph wires are probably of opinion that messages can be heard en route, and should be recommended to listen to the information conveyed; and are about as sensible as the worthy (p. 311) who took out a money-order, and kept it in his pocket as a receipt for his money.

Postmasters, being usually civil and obliging, often have curious requests made to them. Few can beat this:—"John —, acting as farmer here, would be very much obliged to the postmaster if he would be so good as to name a suitable party at — to whom he might sell a 30 stone pig of good quality well." Again, a man, whose letter had miscarried, pens the following gem:—"I got no redress before, but trust I shall on this occasion, or else there must be something rotten in the state of Denmark. Judas Iscariot was a thief, and carried the bag, and it will be a pity and a great scandal if he has found a successor in some branch of the post-office."

We could, had we space, prolong our quotations, without fatiguing our readers, or doing more than touching the fringe of the material available in "The Royal Mail." Mr. Hyde has compiled one of the most interesting and amusing works which it has ever been our fortune to meet. We thank him for much pleasure, and for many a hearty laugh; and those of our readers who have looked into a work emphatically suitable to while away a dull hour, or to dispel a fit of the blues, are sure to say to others, "go and do likewise."

RAILWAYS IN INDIA.

WHEN the late Emperor of Russia was requested to indicate the direction which the railway from St. Petersburg to Moscow, then about to be constructed, was to take, he asked, it is said, for a ruler and a pencil, and drew on the map a straight line, after the fashion of a Roman road, between the two places. We know of no railway in England which thus undeviatingly pursues its course "turning neither to the right hand nor to the left," unless it be the South-Eastern between Redhill and Ashford. The monotony of such a track, passing, not through fields and hop-gardens, but over Russian plains, may be imagined.

A railroad in Russia is, as a rule, simply a strategical means of communication. And it has been objected to our Indian lines, that military considerations have been allowed undue weight. We do not concur in this opinion. While the Government, who, in the first instance, guaranteed the interest on the capital of the railway companies were, in common fairness, entitled to claim, in even a greater degree than they did, a voice as to the exact line to be pursued, much was, in fact, left to the discretion of the companies themselves. And, considering the peculiar position which the Indian railways occupy, as partly strategical, partly commercial, works, the shareholders in which were merely, so to speak, holders of Government annuities, the interest of which was to be paid on a sliding scale; this was, perhaps, as equitable a course as could have been pursued.

The enormous importance to India of a rapid development of its railways lends much interest to an article which recently appeared in the Statist, and in which the progress made in this respect in India is contrasted with that in America.

Taking the years from 1870 to 1884-85, we find only one year, and that the last, with a mileage of over 1,000 miles completed in the year, contrasting with American construction of an average of some 9,000 miles a year from 1880 to 1883, and 3,700 miles in 1884. At March 31st there were about 3,500 miles under construction in India, sanction had been given to the construction of 1,344 more miles, and over 6,000 miles of projected railways had been surveyed or were under survey at that date, while Russia is making two miles a day! It is clear that it has not, in former years, been owing to the reluctance of capitalists to invest in these undertakings that more rapid progress has not been made, for £156,638,000, taking the rupee at its normal rate of two shillings, had been expended up to the end of last year. And it is the obvious duty of the Government to encourage further expenditure in this direction.

It has, therefore, caused surprise in some quarters, that it has lately been found impossible to obtain subscriptions for £3,000,000 for the construction of the Midland Railway of India, though the Secretary of State had guaranteed 4 per cent. on the capital to be subscribed, and though the undertaking was supported by the whole influence of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company. The fact is ominous for the future development of Indian railway communications, and has, on this ground, naturally attracted much attention. An attempt to investigate its cause is made, in an interesting pamphlet (reprinted in the Times of Tuesday, the 15th inst.) by Mr. Lionel Cohen, who traces it in great degree to indiscreet management, whereby companies, all alike armed with the State guarantee, have been allowed to compete in the money market, to the ultimate depreciation of the value of the various Stocks, and consequent loss to the Government. It was, in fact, like the right hand bidding against the left. The guarantees, too, vary both in form and character.

The conditions of each guarantee should (says Mr. Cohen) be as simple and as uniform as possible, so as not to confuse the investor with a multiplicity of competing securities, all based on one foundation, yet each one varying in detail on many points; and care should be taken not to restrict the freedom of the market by the necessary differences of price which these varying conditions inevitably produce.

At the commencement of the introduction of the system of railway guarantees, the conditions of the contracts for the different railway lines were nearly identical. Five per cent. guarantee, with a moiety of surplus profits, was the stereotyped form, and eight railway companies were launched on this basis. The capital which these companies ultimately raised was about 103 millions sterling. Of this amount about 12 millions was raised on debenture bonds or debenture stock; but, of the remaining 91 millions of share capital, only £1,850,000 was raised at rates other than 5 per cent. Within the past four years five companies have been incorporated, and have issued rather more than ten millions of capital, of which about two millions have been raised by debenture bonds. In all these five companies the conditions of the concession have materially varied, as follows:—

The Bengal Central has a guarantee of 4 per cent. during construction only, and no guarantee thereafter. The land is given free of cost.

The Bengal and North-Western has no guarantee whatever. The land is given free of cost.

The Rohilkund and Kumaon has a guarantee of 4 per cent. during construction on a limited amount of capital, and a subsidy thereafter. Government land only is given free of cost.

The Southern Mahratta has a guarantee of 3½ per cent. for the term of the concession, with an extra ½ per cent. for five years (afterwards extended to seven years). No stipulation exists as to the acquisition of land free of cost.

The Midland Railway of India has a guarantee of 4 per cent. for the term of the concession. No stipulation is believed to exist as to the free acquisition of land.

These varying conditions, coupled with similar variety in the dealings with the annuities which form the purchase money for lines taken over by Government, have perplexed and irritated persons who might otherwise have invested. "There can be no doubt," adds the writer, "that recent instances of the uncertainty and illiberality which characterise the action of the Indian Administration in their railway finance have damaged the market value of all Indian railway property, have shaken the confidence of dealers in Indian railway stock, and have almost destroyed the freedom of the market. All such steps should forthwith be retraced."

With a proposal to consolidate all Indian railway stock into "one general railway debt," to be managed by the Bank of England, is coupled a strong recommendation that the Government of India should, like that of England, have an authorised representative of its interests in the City. This would, Mr. Cohen urges, obviate difficulties which have, in his opinion, "mainly arisen from a disregard by the authorities of the requirements and prejudices of investors, from a want of familiarity on their part with the technicalities of the market, and from a lack of uniformity in the conditions of the various concessions. The combined effect of all these causes has certainly been to deter capital from freely flowing into the Indian railway market."

We have thought it right to refer at length to a matter so deeply affecting the welfare of India, and, doubtless, the interests of many of our readers, and to which, as having probably influenced the price of Indian railway shares far more than the diminished receipts of the past year, it is well that attention should be drawn.

Not of less importance than the means of constructing railways, is their utility when constructed, the utility, not only of each individual line, but their completeness, and adaptability to State and other purposes, in their entirety as a system. And here we cannot help thinking that much is wanting in India in one respect at least. We allude, of course, to the great variety of gauge. Irrational as the narrow gauge in England was—it is well known that it was one purely arbitrary, and has no raison d'être except that 4ft. 8½in. was the usual width between the wheels of the stage—coaches of yore—and preferable in many respects, as was Brunel's of seven feet (which is said to have enabled him, on one occasion, to take a locomotive from Paddington to Bristol in an hour), yet such was the inconvenience of the "break of gauge," and the "breaking of bulk" which it occasioned, that it has been found needful to secure uniformity by adding the narrower line over the entire Great Western system.

Now, in India, everyone seems, in this all-important matter of gauge, to have, far too much, done what seemed right in his own eyes, and under "differences of administration," we have had great differences of opinion on the subject, with the result, that strategical considerations, which, where distances are so vast, ought to be paramount, have been, in a measure, "shunted." The main system is on the broad gauge of 5ft. 6in., as are those of its feeders, which "can be worked profitably only by interchange with the existing trunk lines. But the remaining State lines, including the important railway across Rajputana and Malwa, and all the railways in Northern Bengal and British Burma, are on the mètre gauge"—3ft. 3⅜in., a purely fanciful one—while, "in a few exceptional cases, the still narrower gauge of 2ft. 6in. has been adopted." These last-named are, however, of no great length. But the absurdity of having the Malwa-Rajputana line literally en l'air with a break of gauge inevitable at either end, seems not to have escaped the Commons Committee of 1884, who laid "considerable stress," as Colonel Stanton's report mentions (para. 11), "on the importance of avoiding break of gauge."

We have had a scare political, which may well enforce the conclusions of the Committee, and also reminds the Government of their primary recommendation that railway extension should be proceeded with much more rapidly. Nor should it be forgotten that, in the opinion of the high authority from whose pamphlet we have quoted, there would be no lack of funds were the Government itself to make its appearance direct in the market, instead of doing so by means of the circuitous and costly intervention of a railway Company.

TELEGRAPHS.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, Sept. 8th; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, Sept. 6th.

THE most prominent subjects adverted to by the Times Correspondent in his usual weekly telegram are, Burma, and the effects of the late floods in Bengal.

THE crisis in Burma, on which Mr. Colquhoun is to address the London Chamber of Commerce to-morrow, is approaching an acute stage. The French interests in Mandalay are of the smallest, being confined to a few merchants who supply the palace with trinkets.

THE origin of the quarrel between the King and our fellow-subjects of the Bombay and Burma Corporation was, as is not unusual, money:—

The dispute between the Burmese Government and the Bombay and Burma Corporation commenced six months ago. The corporation holds leases of extensive forests in Upper Burma, and has been in the habit of making the King advances in anticipation of duties. It declined to continue this practice just at the time when the King was anxious to raise money to give a great feast.

THE same correspondent had previously reported on the 25th:—

The Bengal Chamber of Commerce yesterday passed a resolution expressing the grave apprehension with which it viewed the possible establishment by any foreign Power of a political and commercial monopoly at Mandalay, and urging the Indian Government to take prompt steps for the protection of British rights, interests, and commerce. On Thursday a deputation of the Rangoon Chamber of Commerce presented to the Chief Commissioner of British Burma a resolution protesting against the proposed concessions in Upper Burma to a French company. Mr. Bernard replied that he would transmit the resolution to the Indian Government, which was already informed regarding the proposed concessions. He added that the Indian Government had hitherto exercised exclusive, and, in the long run, paramount, influence on the commercial policy of Ava. British Burma commanded the only possible waterway thither and to Western China. Any railway made for many years to come must enter Burmah through British territory. Therefore, the Indian Government could still exercise paramount influence. It would not object to the subjects of the allied State settling in Upper Burma, for its policy was to encourage free trade everywhere. Mr. Bernard added that he agreed with the deputation that the proposal to give the management of the Customs and trade to foreign concessionnaires seriously threatened British interests. It might, however, be left to the Indian Government to protect British trade with Burma and Western China. News has reached Rangoon that on Monday last, at Mengyang, on the Sittang River, the Burmese soldiers seized a number of timber rafts belonging to the Bombay and Burma Trading Company, fired on the raftsmen, and imprisoned some of them. This occurred two days before any sum was payable by the company, even under the recent judgment of the Burmese Supreme Court.

Why no resident at Mandalay?

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal is engaged in inspecting the lately flooded districts. Relief works have been ordered in Nuddea, where only a fourth of the aus crop has been saved, while the amun or middle crop has been almost entirely ruined throughout the flooded districts.

GLOOMY reports of impending scarcity come from Mysore. Although the recent rain has done some good, the drought has injured the crops so seriously that extensive relief measures will doubtless be necessary. This year's monsoon has been capricious, even beyond the ordinary capriciousness of Indian seasons. While it has deluged Lower Bengal and Behar, it has given Western India barely enough rain to save the crops, and has almost entirely failed over a great part of Southern India.

It is believed that the Joint Boundary Commission will meet at Zulfikar, and thence work across to Maruchak. This operation is expected to occupy the time till the winter, when the British Commission is likely to go into winter quarters near Herat. In the spring the work may be carried on to Khojah Saleh, and thence to the Upper Oxus.

IBRAHIM KHAN, the new British Attaché, has passed Cabul, en route to Herat, to join the Commission. Arrangements are being made to send fresh stores of clothing and tents to the Commission for the winter.

As the troops composing the First Army Corps are now released from the orders warning them to be ready for active service, the transport collected for the corps will be reduced, and so distributed as to be available in the event of sudden necessity.

WE are glad to see continued favourable reports of the success of the Fund for female medical relief, which has been so well inaugurated by Lady Dufferin.

THE Bombay Gazette understands that the Secretary of State has sanctioned the establishment in India of a Military College, somewhat on the basis of Sandhurst; where members of the Native aristocracy, desiring to qualify for a military career, will receive education. The Gazette concludes from this that the Government have resolved on a plan for providing Native gentlemen with commissions.

It is interesting to observe that British Burma hitherto possessed no titles of honour. Some years ago the Viceroy conferred on a Burman the title of Rai Bahadoor; but it was not "understood" of the people, and so the experiment was not repeated. Learned consultations, however, were held, and on inquiry it was ascertained that the people would be glad if such titles were given as would recognise the recipients' descent from the solar race. The solar myth is thus a reality in Burma. But the Government, which frankly admitted its own sovereigns to be descended from barbarian ancestors, were not in a hurry to ascribe a splendid solar birth to the forefathers of its own subjects. After a good deal of speculation it was decided to establish three classes of titles with a purely secular meaning. They are (1) Thwe gaug nywe da ya Min, or Brave, good chief who has received a silver sword; (2) Kyet thaye zaung shwe salwe ya Min, or Chief who has received a gold chain of honour; (3) Ahmudan gaunge tazeik ya Min, or Chief who has done good service and received a medal. Quite prosaic, we are sorry to say, and of the earth, earthy—besides very long.

WE are not surprised to see the stir created among the Native papers by the commission on Indian affairs proposed by Lord R. Churchill. The Someprokash says:—

Lord Randolph Churchill has given us great hopes. His Lordship has spoken very sensibly on the Indian Budget. If a Commission be appointed, it will appear that the English officials are not so competent, in proportion to the salary they draw, as they ought to be. The Government may effect retrenchments by abolishing the highly paid and unnecessary appointments, and employing the Natives largely on less pay. Now let us see how far Lord Randolph Churchill is successful in his endeavours in this direction. We are aware that, whenever any liberal-minded Englishman proposes retrenchment, the selfish Anglo-Indians try to prevent the same by making a strong agitation. Retrenchment by the Government means to them a reduction in their income. We therefore warn Lord Randolph Churchill not to be led by the Anglo-Indians.

FROM the Sahachar we have another aspect of the matter:—

There was no necessity for increasing the military forces in India on account of the apprehensions of war with Russia. Russia entertains no desire to invade India. We shall not suffer in any way if she be allowed to take possession of Afghanistan. The increase of our military forces will cause heavy losses. If the Tories continue to administer the country we shall be overburdened with taxes. The progress of the country will be stopped. The more the taxes increase the more the people will be displeased with the Government. In order to ward off external dangers it is by no means advisable to create internal discontent.

THE Shafiq-i-Hind has a leading article, entitled, "The System of Government in India," in which, after remarking that the necessity for an inquiry into the system of government in India is admitted on all hands, the writer says:—

The Natives have, from time to time, urged the necessity for an inquiry into the affairs of this country by a Royal Commission. Thousands of articles have been written on the subject, and numerous essays have been published, while the subject has been forced on the attention of the British public through the leading papers in England; but unfortunately no notice has been taken by Liberals or Conservatives of this all-important question. It is, however, a matter for congratulation that Lord Randolph Churchill, who recently visited India, is determined to fulfil his promise; and an inquiry will be made into the affairs of this country next year. It would be premature to say as to what would be the result of the proposed inquiry, but there can be no doubt that it can do no harm to India; but, on the contrary, it will confer at least one great advantage on her—viz., that it will make the British public take an intelligent interest in her affairs.

THE Suravi would, we suppose, prefer a Royal Commission, with a strong infusion of the Native element. It remarks:—

The object of the Parliamentary Commission proposed by Lord R. Churchill is to ascertain the opinion of the educated Natives of India on the subject of Indian administration. The educated Natives are gradually becoming powerful. If their claims are not satisfied, it will be difficult for the English to govern India. But will their suggestions for reforms be taken into consideration? If not, there is no necessity for the appointment of a Parliamentary Commission.

THIS from the Englishman's correspondent at Aden is lamentably typical of all our doings in the defence of our possessions in the Eastern seas:—

There have been many changes here; both the Reindeer and the Turquoise having gone off cruising with the Admiral in the Liachante. No one would think that our relations were at all strained with any Power, much less with one like Russia, whose sailors are as unscrupulous as her soldiers, for here at Aden, one of the principal coaling stations England has, there is only for its protection one small paddle-wheel man-of-war carrying a couple of guns or so, the Sphinx. Of course, were the fortifications complete, this would not matter, but at present, perhaps, there are very few guns that could be used, or at least brought to bear on an enemy's cruiser. The work in the forts here goes on steadily, but is very slow and very tedious work indeed.

A RETURN just issued by the India Office shows that there are at present 326 officers drawing Colonels' allowances at home, excluding twenty-six Artillery allowances. There are 1,535 officers retained in the Staff Corps, Infantry, and Cavalry, and 1,283 others belonging to the Engineers, Artillery, and Infantry, the Medical and Ecclesiastical Departments, &c. The total cost of Colonels' allowances, retired pay, and pension to these officers amounts to £1,447,590 per annum, the charges being borne by Indian revenue.

THE Viedomosti states that a syndicate of Russian merchants has applied to the Government for a concession for constructing a railway line between Kizil Arvat, Askabad, Merv, Burdalyk, and Tashkend. The capital is to be raised by a company which will take over the Trans-Caspian Railway as far as it is completed, and also the former Aral flotilla. The portion of the line between Kizil Arvat and Merv is to be laid within two years, and that between Merv and Tashkend in three years.

THE opinion which M. Lessar, the Russian Commissioner, has expressed to the London correspondent of Le Matin with respect to the new Afghan understanding is worth quoting. He said:—

The signed agreement leaves the Pass of Zulkifir in the possession of the Afghans. But this pass has two outlets. We remain masters of the second, at the east of Zulkifir and at the north of Akrobat. At no price can we allow the Afghans to enter on our territory at their convenience, which would prevent us from guarding the second outlet of the pass while the Afghans retained the opposite side, on which they might raise whatever fortifications they thought fit.

"WE are glad," says the Indu Prokash, "to see that means are being taken to rejuvenate the Alexandra Native Girls' English Institution. Time was when the idea of giving English education to Native girls was so repugnant to the minds of Natives—even Parsis included—that the promoters of the institution were greeted with persecution by their more orthodox brethren, who looked upon the school as an outlandish institution. Were it not for the dogged perseverance of Mr. Manekji Cursetji, better known as Manekji Judge, and his colleagues, the institution would have long since been victimised to a superstitious prejudice. The success of the institution is in a measure due also to its present energetic secretary, Mr. J. C. Cama.

SOME further details have transpired regarding the proposed additions to the Native Army in India. Four new regiments of infantry, in addition to the five new Goorkha regiments, will be added to the Bengal Army. They will be recruited mainly from the Sikhs and the other warlike races of Upper India, and possibly one of them will be constituted as a pioneer regiment, composed of Muzbi Sikhs. This will enable the triple battalion scheme to be applied to the pioneers. It is also stated that, by way of further improving the condition of the Native soldiers, good-service pay and increments will be granted after periods of three, six, and nine years, instead of three, nine, and fifteen, as hitherto.

"THE sales of Government Bills upon India this week call," remarks the Statist, "for special comment. It will be remembered that at the previous official allotment, on Wednesday week, the lowest price recorded for Government Bills was touched—namely, 1s. 6d. per rupee. A day or two afterwards, that is to say, on Saturday last, special applications were made at a higher price, and several other special sales have been made during the week at advancing rates; so that while the India Council were able to dispose of the whole of the 15 lacs offered on Wednesday for tender, special allotments have also been made to the extent of over 20 lacs, making the total remittances granted upwards of 35 lacs. Owing to this improved demand, the Council have been able to advance rates materially. For the official allotment on Wednesday the highest tender sent in was at 1s. 6½d. per rupee, and at this price the whole of the 15 lacs offered were placed, applicants not receiving quite all they required."

WE are glad to read the subjoined in the Army and Navy Gazette. It is a move in the right direction:—

General Sir Donald Stewart, Commander-in-Chief in India, has issued a General Order, in which he urges upon general officers commanding districts, divisions, or brigades, the necessity of giving as much encouragement as possible to the Indian volunteers by brigading them with regular troops, &c.

FOLKS who are given to fishing had better give one part of Travancore a wide berth. The Englishman informs us that—

A wild tribe living in a small district called Anjennand, near the River Pandi, in the territory of the Maharajah of Travancore, have a most unpleasant superstition. They believe that if nine human heads are cut off and buried in the reservoir from which their cultivation is irrigated, their goddess, Meenachee, will be propitiated, and all will go well. This year rain was needed, and the tribesmen saw their opportunity of propitiating the goddess. Three strangers of a different caste came into their neighbourhood fishing, and encamped on the banks of the stream. Three of the men thereupon armed themselves with sharp heavy choppers, and went to the spot where the strangers were. The oldest of the men at once went up to an old woman, and cut off her head with one blow. On seeing this, the other two strangers, her husband and a young girl, ran away, but were soon overtaken and beheaded. The murderers took home the heads, and after offering them at the shrine of their Meenachee, threw them into the reservoir. The recurrence of these barbarous superstitions serves to remind us of the very partial advance which India has as yet made on the path of civilisation.

COLONEL PRJEVALSKY has sent the following message, dated July 1, from his camp in Chinese Turkestan:—

It is impossible to penetrate into Tibet by the Keria mountains, the passes through them being impracticable for our beasts of burden, and the Chinese having obstructed the paths with rocks and having also destroyed the bridges. The Native population has given us everywhere a good reception, and, despite the interference of the Chinese, their sympathies with the Russians are openly pronounced. We shall pass the present month among the snow-covered mountains between the rivers of Keria and Khoten. About the middle of August we shall go to Khoten, and then by the course of the river of the same name to Aksu. All is well.

We see it stated that a number of influential native gentlemen have issued a circular appealing to the public spirit and patriotism of their countrymen to subscribe a fund towards the payment of a portion of Sir John Budd Phear's expenses in standing as a Liberal candidate for the constituency of Honiton, as he is anxious to enter Parliament for the good of this country.

Chit Chat.

THE natives of India labour under an impression that soda-water, which in the East is largely consumed by Englishmen, invigorates them with its "fizzing" propensities. Perhaps so, but as it is generally taken in the shape of "brandi-pani," may not the "spirit" have some effect?

To have had in his lifetime ten wives and fifty children, and never to have enjoyed an income of more than £4 a month, has been the fate of an old Mahratta doctor at Bombay. They were not "dressy" better halves, or public school children.

WHAT will not Faith do? Here is an example: A student at the Sattara High School recently entered upon a tolerably extensive course of charity; the reason is quaint. He thought that, if he helped the poor, God would help him to pass the ensuing matriculation examination, for which he was studying hard! The result is not given.

A SMALL child was told one day "to sit up and behave like a Christian." The answer was crushing: "Me a Christian! Ayah and Pedro is a Christian—I'm a English." Alike from a grammatical and religious point of view the statement was original.

A HUNDRED wickets in a season for an average of for five-and-a-half runs a-piece. Not bad bowling, and Mr. Newnham is to be congratulated.

WHAT is fame? It is "believed" at Bombay that Beethoven wrote a Sonata for horn and piano.

MR. JUSTICE KERNAN states that the Indian Penal Code enjoins that when theft is constantly repeated the judge has no option but to pass a sentence of transportation for life! So when a prisoner came before him, having purloined four shillings, penal servitude for the rest of his days was the overwhelming edict of the man of law. Surely there must be some mistake.

THERE is a well-known story, chronicled among Irish bulls, which tells how a son of Erin, returning from market, announced "My pig did not sell for so much as I expected; I never thought it would."

MR. HISS, says the Japan Weekly Mail, a new and successful manufacturer of aerated waters in Tokyo, Japan, has requested the press to assist his enterprise by giving publicity to his prospectus. This is it:—

It is a general article of belief that, from a commercial point, Government enterprise is always a failure; but India is a land of surprises. The Burrakur Ironworks, when worked by private capitalists, failed altogether, but when transferred to the paternal care of the "authorities," lo! the scene was changed, and the concern at once commenced to make a steady and constantly-increasing profit—and why? The secret was simple. The wizard's enchantment consisted of the simple expedient of reducing expenditure.

BOMBAY has recently found, after a variety of costly experiments, and, perhaps, little less costly failures, that the Natives in that Presidency understand better than their leaders how to raise water for irrigation purposes. Of course they do.

SEVEN cases of "macaroni" shipped from Calcutta to Burma were found to contain cartridges!

SIMLA is gay. The menu for one week comprised a musical party at the Viceregal Lodge, a childrens' fancy dress ball, a dance, and a subscription ball, while society has gone crazy about the forthcoming fancy dress ball, which is announced for the 1st of October. If to all these festivities be added the daily routine of dinner, and other social amusements, the Hill Station cannot be said to be dull. Yet people are grumbling, some because they cannot get there, others because, being there, they cannot get away.

THE first practical step towards carrying out Lady Dufferin's scheme for supplying female medical aid to the women of India is about to be taken at Simla, in the shape of the erection of a small cottage for the accommodation of an English lady M.D. and her assistants. But surely Simla is not much peopled by Native "purdā" women, i.e., women who never emerge from the seclusion to which some classes of Natives doom the ladies of their establishment.

ADVERTISING is, it is well known, an art to be studied and cultivated ere success is attained, but "dunning," as practised in England, is, as a rule, a much more prosaic and matter-of-fact proceeding. However, even in this direction there is scope for genius. It was no common mind which indited the following polite request for some of a young officer's superfluous cash:—"Dear Sir,—Amongst the overdue accounts which I find in the ledger of Messrs. — Bros. of this town, I find the enclosed for 5s. 6d., which, I presume, was forgotten by you when you left this part of the country. It is said that 'distance lends enchantment to the view,' but it has not yet become a proverb that distance cancels all debts, and we feel sure that this small item only has to be placed before you and you will at once cause it to be paid. We hope your sojourn in the East will be to your advantage, as well as for the Natives, and that when you return it will be to reside again in or near this town, where we may have the pleasure of enlightening your darkness with some more colza oil."

THE approaching marriage of his Highness the Gaekwar is freely discussed at his capital. Funny, for even the name of the lucky princess who is to share the glories of the palace at Baroda has not transpired, and there is even doubt whether the illustrious bridegroom has made up his own mind on the subject. Yet the marriage is "approaching." Perhaps the poor man will be married by anticipation, and a wife found for him by Mrs. Grundy.

THE Eurasian half-caste community in India is very disturbed, not knowing whether to agitate for recognition as Natives or Europeans. Who shall decide?

AN ingenious correspondent in Liverpool tried the method of writing a letter on the back of a halfpenny stamp, which he sent to London; but the scheme failed, as it was ruled by the authorities that the missive should be treated as a letter, and as such being insufficiently prepaid—a penalty of one penny was exacted.

H.E. LORD DUFFERIN is, it is said, " $\frac{1}{2}$ 15 and 1 bisque." What on earth is that? Verily tennis phraseology cannot be said to be "a language understood of the people."

IN India there are two ways of punishing a man. If he is of low rank, poor, and comparatively harmless, he is dismissed or reduced in pay; but if of high station and influential connections, why—then he is promoted.

IN Mysore a man, in a fit of jealousy, bit off his wife's nose and swallowed it. Nature resented the cruel deed, for during the night the husband fell ill of cholera and died. So the poor woman had some consolation.

THE Statesman has a new theory. Not disguising that Bismarck has a predilection for the new Cabinet, it explains that this is due to the circumstance that he "anticipates less difficulty in manipulating them." Ye shades of England's greatness! What a funny paper is the Statesman.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

Like the previous issue of the series of which this little biography forms a part, there is much in the volume to instruct the non-professional, as well as the professional reader. Captain Hozier, in narrating his hero's life, necessarily refers to all the more important events of the all-important reign of Louis XIV. of France. With French history, or with strategy, we do not propose to deal: we would rather touch lightly on such matters, connected with neither, as a careful perusal of the work naturally suggests.

A rather fierce onslaught has been made by Mr. C. B. Cripps in the Army and Navy Magazine for August last on Captain Hozier, among other charges that of misspelling German names of towns being dwelt on. Those who remember how Thomas Carlyle, from the height of his supposed infallibility in matters Teutonic, fell, in his usual coarse and dictatorial manner, foul of some one who, when writing an epitaph on an officer killed at Blenheim, used the word Hochkirchen (instead of—as Thomas Carlyle maintained that it should be spelt—Hohenkirchen), and how effectually the conceited would-be autocrat was put down by the authoritative utterances of Germans, will not be very hard on Captain Hozier. Nor will anyone be so who thoroughly knows German rural life, and the varieties of the names of the same villages, which occur at every turn. We are not by any means so sure even about Tütingen, which Captain Hozier writes "Düttlingen," and the spelling of which with the initial D seems to be the head and front of his offending. The tendency of all Germans has, for the last decade or two, been to eliminate D wherever possible (Todt, dead, being now written Tot, and so on). The T and D are, in many districts, convertible (witness Diedenhofen and Thionville for the same town). In Alsace and Lorraine, for instance, the difference between the two letters, as the writer can aver, is of the slightest. It is highly probable that many a German map has Düttingen, and it is by no means unlikely that this was the spelling adopted by Turenne himself. We mention this, not only because we do not like to see a good biography condemned on a side issue, but because of the intrinsic importance of this matter of spelling names of places. There are, perhaps, few things on which it is less safe to dogmatize. Nevertheless, one system of spelling, either the French, or the German, should unquestionably be adhered to. And, considering the well-known fact, that, at the commencement of the last Franco-German war, the French had no trustworthy maps of their own frontier country, and bought at Berlin as many of the (then Prussian) General Staff maps as they could surreptitiously obtain, there need be little hesitation which of the two should be preferred. But to find Zweibrücken (the two bridges) turned into Deuxpunts, Zabern (Tabernae) into Saverne, and Diedenhofen into Thionville, is undoubtedly puzzling to anyone not acquainted with both French and German. Ambiguities of this kind, no doubt, detract from the value of the present volume, and we can feel assured that they will be corrected in a second edition. Especially must we protest against "Baccarach." It is, in all probability, Bacchi ara, Bacchus' altar. And, from long residence in the place, we can aver that the guttural ch in Bacharach is never omitted in German speech.

But we do not think that, on the mere ground of dubious orthography, those passages of this work which possess sterling merit should be passed over dryshod. The narrative of Turenne's boyhood and youth (the well-known story of his challenging an officer who failed to appreciate his ideal hero, Alexander the Great, so well told in French biographies, is here compressed into three lines) is, like the account of the gradual development of genius in whatever form, replete with interest.

"No one is fit to command others who cannot command himself," says an old and well-approved proverb. And a boy who, at ten years of age, can, merely to show his physical ability to bear the hardships of war, pass a winter's night on a gun carriage on the ramparts of a fortress (of Sedan, too, of all places, where mist and frost make most winter's nights, even in such hostelry as the place affords, the reverse of agreeable), must be admitted to have proved to demonstration his control over himself. That he showed himself in the very highest degree fit to control others will not be disputed. Not only did he, in spite of an apparently cold disposition, probably due to an exaggeratedly strict Puritan education, win the confidence of his soldiers, but he inspired them with an enthusiasm to which Celtic troops, worthily led, are ever prone, an enthusiasm which, under a yet greater commander, emulated, among the snows and avalanches of the Alps, that of Hannibal's Carthaginians, and which carried everything before it, in the face of vastly superior numbers, at the strongly fortified position of Lodi.

It is no part of our purpose to follow Captain Hozier into military details, but rather to call the attention of the reader to the striking character of the great strategist from whom the book takes its name, and to whom, from the time when Turenne took its discipline in hand (p. 56) until the commencement of Napoleon's campaigns, the successes of the French army were in a great measure due.

The essence of genius is said to be an unbounded capacity for mastering details, and this was assuredly possessed by Turenne. "His eye it was which inspected the men, their equipment, their arms, watched them manœuvre and defile with the attentive and severe glance of a great captain accustomed to the thousand details of military life" (p. 145). In constant communication with Paris, "his correspondence everywhere shows a tenderness of feeling for the soldiery, which accounts for the manner in which he was loved by his men. Many generals," adds Captain Hozier, "have won the confidence of their troops, many generals have won the love of their soldiers, but few have combined respect and love in the ranks" (p. 135). The same sympathetic feeling can be traced in his having (p. 129) when in command, as an auxiliary force, of 6,000 of Cromwell's Ironsides in the campaign which gave us Dunkirk (afterwards so shamefully sold by Charles II. for five million livres, or francs)—Captain Hozier's text leaves it to be supposed that it was pounds), he cut up his own plate to "distribute the morsels (p. 128) among the English troops, who from bad weather and want of money were suffering severely." In the course of the same war, desertion became common, "and even Turenne himself had to excuse it on account of the extreme necessity of the men." The English troops seem to have done wonders (p. 129), as is narrated in a passage bearing a close resemblance to one in Macaulay's History, and are everywhere spoken of in favourable terms.

The narratives of the campaigns on the Lower Rhine can easily be followed by anyone who knows the country, but for others a small map at p. 120 will be serviceable. These campaigns, carried on by Turenne with few troops, and but scant supplies, are perhaps the illustration of his life, which he lost by an Austrian cannon-ball in 1675.

The two great blots on Turenne's character are his having fought in the Spanish ranks against his countrymen, on grounds which appear to us wholly insufficient, and his devastation of the Palatinate. This latter Captain Hozier wishes to excuse on the plea of military necessity: the blame, he says, lies, not on the general, whose métier it is to make war sharp that it may be short, but on the ministry who begin the war. We demur to this plea, which would excuse every kind of horror, not excepting Tilly's sack of Magdeburg. It proves too much.

These are but spots on the sun of a great, and, on the whole, good and noble character, which is well summed up by Captain Hozier. We have read his book with pleasure, and think it well merits its place among these military biographies.

ADVANCE AUSTRALIA.*

We really do not think that Australia requires Mr. Finch-Hatton's imperative mood as an incentive to advance, furnishing us, as it does, with a considerable proportion of our provisions of all kinds, and holding out to us the hope that our brethren, who inhabit it, will go far towards supplying the needs, in almost every respect, of the "old country."

It is remarkable, that two of the greatest writers of our day should have placed the turning point of the life of their heroes in what may be called Bushland. Kingsley, in "Two Years Ago," and, more especially, the late Lord Lytton in his "Caxtons," have well depicted the life of an educated Englishman among "the roughest of the rough."

So many University graduates are serving as waiters, grooms, or what not, in Australia and New Zealand, that Mr. Finch-Hatton is to be congratulated in having at once obtained a position of independence, and in having, as his title page says, indulged, to some extent, in "amusement," during his stay in Australia.

Passing over the incidents of his voyage, which, however, as narrated by him, show that he is a close (we cannot say a wholly unprejudiced) observer of people, and a warm admirer of Nature, we find Mr. Hatton landed, as his first piéd à terre in Australia, at Somerset, where pearls are procured, which rival in size those of the Persian Gulf, and nearly equal them in price, one having recently been sold in London for £1,500. Yet this settlement is regarded as a place which "will never develop into anything, as there is no back country to it." And, in Australia, this is a conclusive condemnation of any locality. The whole success of any settlement depends on its having "back country to it." Back country means the possession of wealth, in cattle or sheep, beyond the dreams of avarice; and, when we read the statement at p. 129, we candidly admit that it surpasses any dreams of avarice which ever visited our slumbers. A "station"—what we should, in South America, call a "rancho"—was bought for £200,000, and realised, in two years, £113,000 clear profit, "besides which the station has risen greatly in value."

An ugly fact crops up anent the employment of what is called "black labour" (pp. 160-6). The labourers, chiefly imported from the South Sea Islands, are called Kanakas, a word, it would seem, meaning "men." These people are imported chiefly into Queensland, where sugar is largely grown; and the prohibition of this importation would, our author says, inevitably lead to the separation of that province from the south. Nevertheless, it would be popular with the working-men of Queensland. In these circumstances, the planters turned their attention to that inexhaustible hive of working bees, India. But, if we correctly understand the somewhat confused statement at p. 169, the opposition to any but white labour was too strong to be overcome.

The natives of the country afford many a target for our author's shafts: we would particularly recommend anyone who wants a hearty laugh to read p. 141. It is hardly creditable to our missionaries that the natives should think it a positively preposterous idea that any "nigger" could possibly go to Heaven, or, as one of them expressed it, to "that one who got a store up there;" the possession of "a store" indicating the height of felicity. They have, however, some idea, however vague, that they ought to be "good boys." For "an old nigger once observed, in answer to some inquiry as to his views of a future state, that, 'supposin' he was a bad nigger altogether, debbil-debbil come and take him off.'" Hottentots, as is well known, think that M. le Diable must be white, they being black, just as it has, with us, become a tradition that he must be black, because we are (more or less) white. Now here the Australian shows his sense. He does not think Nicholas white, because he himself is black. On the contrary, his most fervent aspirations are to be white himself. "Directly me bung (die) me jump up white feller," which, says Mr. Hatton, "is the height of their ambition."

Curious occurrences ought to have no place in the world if they be not forthcoming in a comparatively unfettered state of society such as that which exists in diggings and on plantations. But a more out-of-the-way thing than a man being killed by a pound of candles being dropped (even from a height of sixty feet) on his head we don't remember. The drunken magistrate who (p. 229) had nothing to say as to a prisoner charged with stealing goods, value 1s. 4d., but "Take 'im 'way and 'ang 'im," and who, on being assured that his orders had been carried out (which, of course, was not the case) only remarked, "All right, i'shmishcase," is, we devoutly hope, not a fair specimen of his class, even in the backwoods of Australia.

Mr. Finch-Hatton speaks in very favourable terms of the climate of Queensland (with which province he seems to have been most intimately acquainted), and quite resents the imputation that it is "trying." "The only possible way," says he (p. 304), "in which it can be justly so described, is in the sense of being a climate in which people are constantly trying to kill themselves without succeeding. Probably there is no other country in the world in which men habitually take such frightful liberties with their constitutions with impunity."

Mr. Finch-Hatton, in the last chapter of his book, makes some thoughtful remarks on the now somewhat well-worn subject of Imperial Federation. "If," says he, "the Empire is to hold together, the Colonies must be prepared to contribute their due share towards its defence. That they are perfectly willing to do so, there can be little doubt, provided that their true position as integral portions of the Empire be recognised." Observing that England lost America by making "the fatal mistake of treating her as an outlying estate," he proceeds: "The slightest attempt on the part of England to repeat the same tactics with regard to Australia at the present time, or to treat with her otherwise than as an equal in the matter of Federation, would inevitably be followed by separation. . . . The future of England herself, deprived of her Colonies, is too gloomy a picture to dwell upon."

We have perused Mr. Finch-Hatton's book with pleasure. There is a freshness about it which makes it agreeable reading, and favourably distinguishes it from many similar works. But Mr. Hatton must beware of putting into type the argot which may be passable enough in the Bush. A "mob" of cattle, and bullocks which "would have gone up two pair of stairs and down again without getting mixed up," are but two specimens of this lingua franca with which, for the sake of the purity of our mother English, we hope not again to meet.

INDIA: ITS CONDITION, RELIGION, AND MISSIONS.*

It would be difficult to over-estimate the debt of gratitude which the world owes to Missionaries at large, in so far as in many, perhaps in most, countries they, and they alone, studied the languages of the people amongst whom they laboured. As linguists, they stand far ahead of their contemporaries, alike in the days of civilisation as in the earlier ages, when mental darkness moved upon the face of the earth, and the dew of learning fell not to refresh a world desolated with the blight of ignorance and superstition. None the less, from a practical point of view, these men of piety are scarcely trustworthy guides in other branches of research. Living in a groove, and regarding everything from a religious aspect, they, for the most part, imbibe habits of intolerance which, as a rule, is but too palpable in all they write. A missionary is seldom a man of large-heartedness or breadth of intelligence. To this somewhat sweeping assertion exception must be made in so far as concerns the author of the work before us, the Rev. Mr. Bradbury, who betrays in every line a discernment and spirit of judicial impartiality which impart to his views a weight attaching to the writings of comparatively few of his confrères. What does he tell us? The first portion of the work is devoted to a description, in the author's words, of India, but it should rather have been said of that part of the Peninsula inhabited by the Hindus, for it was amongst them that he laboured; in fact, it would have been more accurate and scarcely less preferable had the title chosen been "Bengal: its Condition, Religion, and Missions." Mr. Bradley traces the origin of the Hindus (as far as there is any trustworthy information on the subject), and descants on their chronology with its astounding aggregation of years, so numerous as to pass the limits of comprehension. He tells us of their dress, their religion, their morals, their habits, their institutions, their virtues, and their vices, and the chapters which he devotes to these subjects bear the mark of careful and painstaking investigation, and will amply repay perusal, but we pass on to the portion of the brochure which is the raison d'être of its appearance. Missions—what have our Missionaries done in the East? What success has met their efforts? First, as to education of the youth of the land. The various societies spend on their colleges and schools in India about £70,000 a-year, working "hand and glove" with the Government, who also disburse large sums in the furtherance of the same cause. For this not inconsiderable expenditure, according to the returns of 1881, 131,244 youths received instruction more or less advanced, according to individual requirements and personal aptitude. Of these, doubtless, as Mr. Bradley confesses, many attended not because they had a regard for the religious instruction which they received, but rather because the education was cheap, and the instruction imparted calculated to lead to advancement in life and worldly success. None the less it is scarcely possible, he adds, "to form too high an opinion of the influence the schools are exerting on the work of evangelisation."

But to turn to the more peculiarly religious aspect of the question—preaching—of what practical benefit has it been? As far as figures go the statement is clear. In 1851 there were 102,951 Native Christians, in 1861, 213,370; in 1871, 318,363; and in 1881, 528,590. But what evidence do those who have entered the Church afford of true piety? Let Mr. Bradley testify. "In truthfulness, rectitude, purity and compassion to suffering humanity they rise much above those around them." They contribute according to their means "to the funds of the missions and works of charity;" spite of the pressure put upon them to return to the religion of their ancestors apostates are few and "heroic souls" many. Admitting that compared with Englishmen they are "timid, afraid of difficulties, distrustful of themselves, and disposed to rely on others," none the less they pursue their course faithfully and diligently. In 1812 the Government of India, Mr. Bradley points out, expelled missionaries from the country, apprehending that their preaching would lead to breaches of the peace, anarchy and war. After a lapse of six decades they acknowledged the great obligation under which they were laid by the benevolent exertions made by this very same class of men, "whose blameless example and self-denying labours are infusing new vigour into the stereotyped life of the great population placed under English rule, and preparing them to be in every way better men and better citizens of the great Empire in which they dwell." Higher praise could scarce be given. Mission work in India may in these circumstances well be proud of its results, and the cause may in turn deem itself fortunate in finding an exponent of their aims, their successes, and their failures, conscientious, so thoughtful, and withal so modest as the author of "India: its Condition, Religion and Missions"—a work which should grace the table of everyone who has at heart the welfare of the great dependency which glories in the Empress of India as its Queen.

A LARGE MAP OF INDIA, handsomely printed in colours, and showing the present position of Russia on the borders of Afghanistan, will be issued with Part I. of "Cassell's Illustrated History of India," to be published at the end of the present month.

WE have received No. 8 of Messrs. Letts and Co.'s new Popular Atlas, the maps in which are distinguished, as usual, by great clearness and accuracy. That relating to the Eastern Provinces of Asiatic Russia, and of China, refers to a country, which, considering the present strained state of relations between the two countries, will probably be, ere long, the scene of stirring political events.

A STRANGE story comes from Bombay:—When upwards of 500 miles from shore a large ship, which hailed from Bombay, foundered. Seven of the Native passengers managed to climb into an empty tank, and, without food, water, oars, or sails, floated on the ocean. Day after day passed, and not a sign of land appeared. At length death began to make havoc amongst the little band, till, on the eighteenth day, when the shores of Cutch appeared in sight, but one solitary survivor managed to crawl to land, where, wrapping himself up in a flag which he found flying, he crawled to a human habitation. But could a human being live for such a lengthened period under a blazing Indian sun, without food, water, or the least protection?

ENGLISH HOMES FOR INDIAN STUDENTS.

WE have never, as a nation, been remarkable for the nature of the official hospitality, using the word in its strictest sense, which we extend to distinguished guests. Even crowned heads, unless directly invited by the Sovereign, are usually left very much to their own devices, and have to find their own way to Claridge's, or some other well-known hostelry. Nor was, until recently, anything done to attract the Princes and other notables of our Indian Empire. The son of Tippoo Sultan resided, on his visit here some thirty years back, at a hotel in Vere-street; the Prime Minister, and virtual Ruler, of Nepal was left to shift for himself.

When a more rapid transit gradually diminished the terrors of the Black water, and encouraged the more frequent arrival of Oriental stars of the first magnitude, it was felt that this state of things ought no longer to exist. To leave a Native of the highest distinction to make his own way in England by the help of retired official gentlemen, civil or military, whom he might chance to have known in India, was seen to be not only a breach of hospitality, but just that kind of slight to which the Oriental mind is most especially sensitive. The result was a compromise between the system which had previously existed, and that which appears to us to be the only proper one—namely, to house such visitors as the guests of the nation. An officer was appointed, under the anomalous designation of Political Aide-de-Camp to the Secretary of State for India, whose duty it was to be to combine the functions of interpreter and mentor; to be, in fact, guide, philosopher, and friend.

Whatever the intrinsic merits of this plan, it is understood to have worked fairly well.

But, where big fishes lead, smaller fry will follow. The immense superiority of European over Oriental medical science attracted Native students to our hospitals, while the considerable fees obtained by barristers were an irresistible inducement to many, especially on the Bengal side, to qualify in the Inns of Court. The numbers of these Native gentlemen are far greater than is usually supposed by those who have paid no special attention to the matter, and cannot be estimated by a casual glance at hospital returns, or at lists of law students, were even the latter more generally accessible. It became, therefore, a natural sequence to the institution of the new office irreverently termed "Bear-leader of Swells," that something should be done for the numerous visitors to England for purposes of study, who would otherwise be launched on the troublous sea of London life without aid or counsel. And it is not a little characteristic of our national peculiarities that, in this matter, as in so many others, private enterprise has taken the lead, in a meritorious and beneficent undertaking.

In the last number of the usually interesting Journal of the National Indian Association, an article was devoted to this subject, and a scheme laid before the public, respecting which full details were given, and which has assumed a definite shape. A body of gentlemen, of considerable and varied Indian experience, have combined to devise and to carry out, an arrangement for directing and superintending the studies of those of our Native fellow-subjects who may be willing to avail themselves of the advantages offered; and one of their number, who, like so many other benevolent people, do good by stealth, and would blush to find it fame, has sent us, with an explanatory letter, a copy of the Circular issued. Confident that the undertaking deserves the widest publicity, we have no hesitation in laying its objects, and the means by which it is proposed to attain them, before our readers.

"The subject is one," says our correspondent, "which has for a long time engaged the serious attention of Lord Northbrook, Lord Hobhouse, and other eminent men of experience, and is justly regarded by a considerable number of persons conversant with Indian affairs, as a matter of deep importance to the social and political future of the Indian Empire." He adds:—

It is a significant fact that, not only is the number of young Indians visiting this country becoming greater every year—those in England amounting last year to about 160—but they are also coming over at an earlier age than formerly, and an additional strength is given to this movement by the increasing number of scholarships which are being founded in various parts of India, with the object of assisting promising youths to England for the purposes of education, generally of a special character. It had long been felt that no sufficient personal and responsible assistance was afforded to Indian students visiting this country.

A thoroughly competent Superintendent has been selected in the person of an Oxford graduate, who is also a Barrister, in order to carry out the object of affording counsel and friendly supervision to students from the age of fourteen, and to select, in concert with the committee of the Association, "tutors, schools, colleges, and places of abode" for them; it being, most wisely, in our judgment, designed to give "abundant opportunities for enabling each student to obtain an intimate knowledge of the best side of English home life and manners," as well as, "where practicable, some acquaintance with the manufactures of this country, especially such industries as are suitable to India."

We regard the scheme, which appears in its details to have been carefully and thoughtfully worked out, as deserving of the highest commendation, the more so that, while the fees are not unduly high, it is destined to be entirely self-supporting, and has not the smallest taint of even the appearance of being eleemosynary; and we think that the National Indian Association, whose Hon. Secretary, Miss Manning, resides at 35, Blomfield Road, Maida Hill, has deserved well of India in coming forward as a pioneer in so praiseworthy a work.

MADRAS has started a new enterprise in the shape of the manufacture of sardines, or rather of fish resembling them. Truly this is an age of shams!

THE Ahmednagar "week" comprised a cricket match, a theatrical performance, horse races, a menagerie race, Wilson's Circus, and a ball; but one thing spoilt the equanimity of the male sex, they could not agree who was the "Queen of Beauty." Opinions were also divided as to whose "toilette" passed imagination.

Correspondence.

ALEXANDRIA MARGANA.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Can any of your correspondents give us a description of the present condition of Kubermank, which is supposed to occupy the site of Alexander the Great's city?

It lies on the Kizar or Margus river, and in the Russian Staff Map four roads are marked as leading to it.

1. From Merv, via Iman.

2. From Meruchuk.

3. From Maimaneh.

4. From Batkak.

The Russians usually take their longitude from Ferro, but in the Russian Staff Map they have taken it from Pulkova, which I presume is near St. Petersburg.

The ruins of Alexander the Great's city are believed to be in longitude 63° 10' east of Greenwich.—Your obedient servant,
September 23rd. T.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, Sept. 15th; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, Sept. 13th.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs, under date 4th inst., as follows:—

The Herat fortifications are said to be making rapid progress under the superintendence of Major Holdich. The Ameer has issued urgent instructions to the Candahar officials to push forward the guns intended for its defence.

News continues to be received by the Government to the effect that the laying of the Trans-Caspian Railway is being carried on in an energetic manner. According to the latest accounts the Boundary Commission was still encamped at Kushan.

Colonel Lockhart is at Chitral, in which neighbourhood he will for the present remain.

THE new Maharajah of Kashmir duly assumed his dignities and responsibilities, reading in English, and afterwards in Urdu, a manifesto expressive of his unswerving loyalty, his resolve to place all his resources at the Viceroy's disposal, together with his personal services at the head of his army, and his determination to repress intrigue and corruption while introducing reforms. These latter, he added, would no doubt be watched, both by Government and the public, with interest.

WE are right glad to learn that a step we have so long advocated is to be taken, and the Resident to be permanently stationed in Kashmir. This arrangement has no political significance, and is made so that Sir Oliver St. John, an officer of experience and ability, may give more effective assistance in carrying out the reforms contemplated.

THE Lieut.-Governor of Bengal has issued a Resolution regarding the damage caused by the floods. Much had been done by the District officers, and, so far as Sir R. Thompson himself had seen, though many houses had been destroyed, few cattle had been lost. Pending the adoption of larger measures, advances will be made, and employment given. But the Resolution states that financial considerations absolutely preclude the State from attempting to alleviate the hardship caused through the destruction of houses by the floods. Sir R. Thompson, therefore, calls for a public subscription, and has nominated a thoroughly representative committee, with power to add to its number, for the organising of relief. In Calcutta the leading European firms had begun to subscribe liberally before the issue of the Resolution. In many other places subscriptions were being raised locally.

SOME parts of India are suffering from lack, rather than from excess, of rain. Except in the flooded tracts the prospects of the crops are good in Bengal. In the Madras Presidency the prospects are generally fair. In the Mysore State more rain is wanted generally, but the prospects are less discouraging. The authorities there, British and Native, are prepared with a plan of campaign in accordance with the recommendation of the Famine Commission, should the rainfall continue insufficient. In Guzerat, and parts of Kandesh, more rain is urgently needed. A further supply of rain is much wanted in most of the States in Central India and the Rajpootana Agencies. A greater rainfall is also required in the Central Provinces.

SCARCITY in one place, abundance in another, simply due, in many cases at least, to want of proper communications, is an all but normal thing in India. We hope that retrenchment will not be extended to this, most necessary, item of outlay. The Pioneer tells us:—

there is one feature of it which a faint gleam of general interest may, perhaps, be said to enliven, to wit, the schedule of prices current of food-grains throughout the Indian Empire. The prices quoted are for a recently completed fortnight; side by side with these are the prices for the preceding fortnight, and for a corresponding fortnight in the preceding year. The food-grains quoted are wheat, barley, rice, best and common, great millet (jowar), bulrush millet (bajra), lesser millets, and gram; these are supplemented by quotations of firewood and salt. The variations are curiously great. For instance, at Nowgong, in Assam, wheat for the current fortnight sold at only 8 seers of 80 tolabas for one rupee. In Bannu no less than 44 seers were to be had for the same sum. But Assam makes up for the dearthness of grain by providing external comforts at a delightfully low rate. At Kamrup 200 seers of firewood are to be had for the rupee; at Tounghoo, in Burma, only 27 seers. Possibly in this is to be found the real reason why the practice of suttie never attained popularity in Burma. The expense of a well-organised funeral-pyre would probably swamp the resources of the entire district.

THE Bharat Mihir complains, it would seem not without reason, that the Bengal Tenancy Act is to be brought into operation at a particularly inconvenient time of the year:—

It would indeed have been better if the new law had come into operation from the beginning of the new Bengali year. If it comes into operation from the month of November, the accounts of the first six months will have to be kept according to the old law, and of the next six months under the new law. This will cause great confusion; but the Lieutenant-Governor did not take this fact into consideration. We did not for a moment believe that his Honour would refuse to grant this last prayer of the zemindars.

It was to be expected that the late war preparations would give rise to a general clamour for retrenchment.

The preparations, says the Sanjibani, have cost four crores of rupees in excess of income. In order to meet this, some necessary expenses are to be reduced, and many poor people will be deprived of their livelihood. A saving is being made by reducing the number of clerks and dufftries, stopping necessary Public Works, and reducing the expenses of the Education Department. Now let our readers say whether this is just and proper. The civilians have come out to this country in order to earn money. They will not care much whether the people of this country live or die; but we hope that Lord Dufferin, who is just and impartial, will not approve of this policy.

EQUALLY was an onslaught on the salaries drawn by Europeans to be anticipated. This we have, among other journals, in the Ananda Bazar Patrika, in the following terms:—

Lord Randolph Churchill says that the preparations for a war with Russia would cost three crores of rupees from the revenues of India, and that he intends to meet this expense by effecting retrenchments without imposing any fresh taxes. We don't know how Lord Randolph Churchill will effect this. It will not be enough to dispense with the services of some poor clerks and peons. The income of many highly-paid Englishmen ought to be reduced. If Lord Randolph Churchill is to be successful, he must disregard the clamours of the Anglo-Indians.

A RUSSIAN paper, the Schems, states that the Russian Government have been trying to persuade the Ameer of Bokhara to cede the district of Kerki, lying on the further side of the Amu Daria, for a compensation of 3½ million roubles. But the aged Ameer, Muzzafer Eddin, demands, as the price of the cession, the restoration of the holy city of Samarkand, where for over 1,100 years the rulers of Tashkend and Bokhara have been buried. It is not expected that the Ameer's proposal will be listened to.

THE estimates just passed by the Russian Government for 1886 show that the vigorous naval policy initiated last year, just before the Afghan conflict came on the scene, is to be continued and extended. While a few years ago £500,000 sterling was considered a sufficient annual grant for naval construction, and the figure sometimes fell even below this, next twelvemonth will see an expenditure of 11,831,800 roubles, or, at the current rate of exchange, nearly £1,200,000. Of this amount £830,000 will be devoted to the building of hulls, and the remainder to engines and machinery.

THE Broad Arrow has reason to believe that the Duke of Connaught will shortly go out to India as Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army.

SOME interesting particulars are given by Engineering as to the progress of the railway that is being hurried on to the new position Russia has acquired on the Afghan frontier. The electric light having broken down, owing to an accident to the apparatus sent, the men are working at night by the aid of hundreds of lanterns and huge fires fed with petroleum refuse. As far as Askabad the road has been levelled, and it is expected that the final rail will be laid by the end of the month; but much will depend on the completion of the innumerable stone bridges which constitute a peculiar feature of the line. From the Caspian Sea to Sarakhs, a distance of over 500 miles, the railway does not cross a single large river, but from the time it quits the Transcaspian desert and traverses the oasis of Akhal, the country, which is flat and clayey, is intersected by small rivers, growing more and more frequent as the line approaches Askabad. All these streams, most of them dry in summer and torrents in the rainy season, have to be properly bridged, and no timber being forthcoming, General Annenkoff has resorted almost exclusively to stone. The railway is solidly built to a gauge of five feet, the same as most railways in Russia, and the steel rails rolled by the Putiloff Works at St. Petersburg are of the best quality. On the completion of the line to Askabad, the section to Sarakhs will be taken in hand, and from this point three branches will be extended, the first to Penjdeh, the second to Merv, and the third to the important Persian commercial centre of Meshed.

M. LESSAR, says the Times, passed through Moscow on the 1st inst., intending to join the "Afghan Boundary Commission at Zulfikar on the 10th Nov." To the last he seems to have kept up the hypocritical pretence of dread of Afghan aggression.

He regards the boundary question as settled for the time being, and asserts that the Russians will respect the new frontier, but he fears Afghan incursions.

The delimitation of 400 miles of frontier must, he says, occupy eight months.

REUTER reports from Simla, under date Oct. 1:—

The Viceroy held a darbar to-day for the reception of the chiefs of this hill tribes. His Excellency expressed to them his gratification at the proofs received of their loyalty to the Indian Government, adding that he would never forget their conduct during the recent crisis.

The provision of ways and means to meet the extra military expenditure is receiving the careful consideration of the Government.

It is believed that the advisability of introducing an income-tax, affecting also the incomes of public officials, is under discussion, as well as the granting of facilities for the sale of waste lands.

Chit Chat.

THE wretched rupee is worse than ever—it is now worth but 1s. 6½d. People in England would realise what this means if, when they send a P.O. for 2s. 6d. to a tradesman in town, it reckoned on arrival as 2s. Yet this is precisely what happens when an officer in India remits money to his family in England.

Y.W.C.A. Well may Poona have been puzzled to decipher the strange initials. Yet they are very simple. "Young Women's Christian Association," which has been very busy of late trying to improve the condition of the female European assistants in the shops of that city. There was, however, one drawback to success, and this had been overlooked by the zealous authorities of the Y.W.C.A. It was this. The persons about whom these enthusiasts had interested themselves resented their interference, and pleaded to be left alone.

"Now, baba," said an affectionate nurse to the little bantling whom she had just put to bed and made as comfortable as a hot night will allow a child to be, "what will you do in return for poor ayah?" "I'll pray God to make you white," was the ready response of the fair-skinned progeny, who thought all "niggers" ought to be bleached.

"THE more I see of men," said a witty French lady, "the higher opinion I have of dogs."

NOTICES are, it is said, exhibited in the Afghan Mosques inviting the faithful to pray for "the Amir Lord Dufferin and the Vice-Amir Abdur Rahman." This reads strange, seeing that the former is a Christian, while the latter is one of the followers of the Prophet of Arabia.

THE Governor of Mandalay, with his wife and four of the Queen's Maids of Honour, have left Mandalay en route for Bassein with the view of inspecting a white elephant which is said to have four tusks instead of two.

SIMLA is to have a grand review of troops, as well as some mimic warfare, the umpire being Sir Frederick Roberts. So far good; but the fiat has gone forth "No ladies in Camp," and gallantry hangs its despondent head.

To kidnap two young girls employment was given to nineteen persons, three of them being women. What a grand opportunity for some sensational writer in the Press!

SIMLA has made a new departure in the shape of a juvenile fancy dress ball, in place of the masquerades confined to persons who have reached years of discretion. But judging from the names of the guests it would be puzzling to assign to them the proper sex. Is "Lettice" a boy's name or a girl's? What is "Viccie," "Ehret," "Cushla," and "Bhoa"? They might one and all be "he's," "she's," or "its."

HERE is the history of a mule written by a Native "vet." :—"First of all the animal suffered from the effect of warms, and was in a very poor condition. Being cured of the warms disease, the animal was attacked with asthma; cured of this disease the animal was affected with a very bad skin disease, as all the hair of the body began to fall off. But after a short time the animal was also cured of this disease, to be further attacked with brasatee sore, being recovered from this disease, too. The animal was fit for work for a short time; and then the animal was hurt by a cart-wheel on his caronut joint, and no sooner he was cured of the hurt than he lastly suffered with ctarrh disease, of which he died four or five days after, but did not show any bad symptoms of the disease until the animal was on the point of death; at once animal fell down on the ground and died. This animal always took his food as much as he can get, never refused to eat grain or grass, and no anything rung in digestion." The writer, to complete the graphic narrative, signs himself "Hed Salootry."

JUTE seems "played out" in India. From amongst eleven companies two worked at a profit, two went into liquidation, and seven "earned" a loss.

A LEADING paper in this country has been severely criticising Colonel Lockhart's journey to Gilgit, because, forsooth, said the man of letters, "I cannot find where Gilgit is situated." This is charming.

THE Bombay Corporation is being recast. Are we to hear in future of Mr. Alderman Framji Karsetji and the Worshipful Mr. Mr. Byramji Dinshaw, Mayor of Bombay?

THE Times of India is responsible for the information that next November Her Majesty's Theatre, London, is to be opened with a troupe of Parsi actors, charged with the duty of presenting to the British public representations of Native manners and customs. Good; but what about the phraseology? Is all the world to study Hindustani? Are people to applaud what they do not understand, as is the case very frequent with French plays?

WOMEN are like pilchards—when bad, very bad; when good, only middling.

WHO in the name of wonder is the Secretary of State to the Bengal Government in the Judicial, Political and Appointment Department? In future he is to be known to fame as the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal. Again—who is he?

IN South Canara a prisoner was described as "a labourer and devil-dancer." He seems, indeed, to have been under the influence of his Satanic Majesty, for he killed his own mother, and when on his trial danced antics in court. So apparently a devil-dancer is a maniac.

THE Madras Times states that Lieutenant-Colonel C. D. Baynes was born in 1883. Yet he entered the service in 1855!

MR. JUSTICE NORRIS must have a keen sense of humour if the report be true that "at the request of Mr. Garper he said that he would pay respectful attention to anything which may fall from learned counsel of Mr. Garper's standing." Fancy telling a judge to puff you, and getting him to do so.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

ESSAYS AND MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS.*

This work will claim the attention of our readers chiefly on account of the fact that its subject was, from 1872 to April, 1875, Governor of Madras. He was what is called an "advanced thinker;" one, that is, who, going beyond the trodden footpath of experience, gropes, to a great extent, in the dark, and not infrequently stumbles. His biography is written by Lady Hobart in a spirit of implicit wifely confidence in the accuracy of every opinion to which he gave utterance, and is, on this ground alone, pleasant reading. In the speeches and essays relating both to Indian and to other subjects we constantly note the striving—creditable in itself, however unpractical—after something which appears to the writer (or speaker) higher and better than that which exists.

Born in 1818, the son of a clergyman whose teaching seems to have imbued him with a tendency towards a somewhat extreme Evangelicism, Lord Hobart, after serving in various subordinate official capacities in England, was, after the Crimean War, despatched as junior member of a Financial Mission to Turkey. He seems to have had no great affection for the Turks. Indeed, it is, when one remembers the Sinope massacre, singular to find him saying of the war (p. 80), "I think the conduct and bearing of Russia throughout the whole business is (sic) in most painful contrast to our own." But the remedies for the deplorable state of Turkey, and the terms in which Lord Hobart proposed them, are, unfortunately, and in spite of the reforms stipulated by the Berlin Treaty, almost as applicable to that unhappy country now as they then were. Lord Hobart, whatever his prejudices, saw that, to use his own words, "the most essential requisite to Turkey is a thorough administrative reform," and was by no means mealy-mouthed in enforcing this conviction on his superiors. That he not only did his best, but that the best was really excellent, is proved by the words with which a most competent, and most severe, judge of diplomatic efficiency (Lord Palmerston) accosted him on his return, "Well, you have done a good stroke of work!"

Lord Hobart's experience in Turkey made his selection as Chairman of the Ottoman Bank an excellent one; and he held this position till shortly before his appointment to the Government of Madras, where his death from typhoid fever was universally regretted. The Biographical sketch is somewhat overlaid with quotations of letters chiefly interesting to members of the family, or relating to matters out of date; and the omission of these, or their relegation to another portion of the work, would make the narrative clearer, and would much improve a second edition. It is, however, amusing, as these are now printed, to contrast the angry denunciations of the Times for its attitude, with the frequency of the correspondence with it, occurring almost side by side.

Of the miscellaneous writings, we certainly prefer those delineations of nature which show Lord Hobart to have possessed a true, wholesome love for it in all its forms. Some of the descriptions in the "Chapter on the Sea" and "Autumn travels" are far above the average, and occasionally rise to eloquence. The description (at p. 223, Vol. I.) of the Lake of Geneva underlying Mont Blanc "the smiling sea, softening, as she lies there (the Queen of lakes beneath the king of mountains), his majesty by her beauty, and drawing new beauty from the terrors of his mien," is not only poetical, but, like all true poetry, eminently appropriate to the scene delineated.

As a critic, Lord Hobart, it strikes us, is very unequal, as we think most readers will agree with us, if they will take the trouble to peruse the Essay on modern English literature (in Vol. I., p. 247), in which his full, indeed enthusiastic, appreciation of Richardson's marvellous "Clarissa," contrasts singularly (but, we think, characteristically enough of the man) with the almost contemptuous tone in which he speaks of other and later authors, who wrote (not less than Richardson to amuse, and, by amusing, to elevate and instruct, but) to amuse, elevate, and instruct a wider circle, and one different from that to which the author of "Clarissa" addressed himself.

Few of the present generation will be inclined to agree with Lord Hobart that Byron (p. 52) need have gone to Wordsworth to borrow the idea

"To me high mountains are a feeling."

Though even it be true that there is nothing good (or bad) which has not been said before, we should be inclined, without hearing an undue amount of evidence, to pronounce for the defendant on an issue so unwisely raised.

The political Essays are clever, but tinged with the strong political bias which made him think Beaconsfield "a charlatan in every sense of the word," and quote, almost with approval—certainly not with disapproval—a notable utterance by some nameless Romanist journal to the effect that "Romanism and Gladstone have God on their side; Protestantism and Mr. Disraeli, Satan!"

* "Essays and Miscellaneous Writings." By Vere Henry Lord Hobart. With a Biographical Sketch. Edited by Mary, Lady Hobart. In Two Volumes. Macmillan. 1885.

The minutes recorded by the subject of this memoir while Governor of Madras show him in a favourable light as conscientious and painstaking, anxious to master details, yet, perhaps, too fond of unduly considering them in no other light but that of general principles; not a little given to fads, and in some cases even an idologue. Of this no stronger instance could well be given than his desire to devote to the three R's funds intended for a fourth, and, unquestionably, far more important R—namely, roads. It seems to us a pity that they should ever have been exhumed from the decent obscurity of the consultations of the Madras Government; a remark, however, to which we must make exceptions in favour of the Minutes (Vol. II., pp. 272 and 451) on Mahomedan education—which is, even at this date, in a most unsatisfactory condition, more especially as to women—and the correspondence on the Salt-tax, in which Lord Hobart urged, with much vigour and insistence, the interests of the poorer classes of the Presidency committed to his charge.

The work affords ample evidence of a life passed in the conscientious discharge of duty; a fact which, however, a smaller number of pages would have sufficed to substantiate.

MEM SAHIB.*

This little romance of true history—for such we take it to be—is interesting, in so far as it presents to the reader, in a more life-like form than most books of its character, the inner life of an Anglo-Indian household. Of course, there is a skeleton in the cupboard—what romance could be complete without one—and though it is not wholly set forth in the first few chapters, it is not difficult, even from the first, to discern it, and to perceive its bearing on the conduct of the various personages, or in what manner the apparently inscrutable mystery will eventually be unravelled.

The heroine's father had, like the author of "Five Years' Penal Servitude," been one of that interesting body, innocent convicts: the family name was dropped, and the young lady's second baptismal name assumed by herself and her mother. Like all heroines, she is lovely and fascinating; and, still maintaining the disguise of her second name, Holmsleigh, she meets her fate in the shape of an Indian official, one Captain Leslie, who, disregarding the monition conveyed in the old lines, makes her Mrs. Leslie. Her mother's admonitions to keep the cupboard, skeleton and all, fastened, and the key in her own bosom, were, for a while, duly regarded. But every dog must have its day (so says the travesty of common sense attributed to the great poet, who almost certainly wrote "his bay"); and, though for awhile things go well, and Mrs. Leslie shows her pretty self, and airs her pretty voice, at more than one Indian station, to the admiration of the men and to the envy of the ladies, poor Alice's "day" came at last in the shape of a would-be philosopher of the not uncommon or romantic name of Smith, who had known her under her real name of Huntley, and having, partly through her own fault, been confirmed in the conviction that he possessed her secret, tries to use his advantage to the utmost. How an estrangement between husband and wife ensued, how, on their return to England, they were reconciled, the husband entering into amicable relations with the ex-convict, his father-in-law, and, still more wonderful, with his mother-in-law, we leave to our readers to find out from the story itself, which we can conscientiously recommend as a vivid and accurate representation of Anglo-Indian life.

MANUAL OF TELEGRAPHY.†

In the olden days, when Holborn-hill was really a hill, and a stiff one too, people were found who would stop an omnibus just half-way up it, unwitting, or regardless, of the fact, that no greater cruelty could well be perpetrated on horses, and that horses are not, like the propelling power of some of the more recently-introduced tram-cars, made of steel. And even now we see folks insisting on being set down at their own doors, though the conveyance may have "pulled up" not twenty yards away, so little does the average Briton think of the toil of which he is the cause.

The work of ordinary conveyances is, like all things, matters of daily occurrence, taken as a matter of course. So are the infinitely various requirements of railway work, the slightest failure in the fulfilment of which may, nevertheless, cause the loss of scores of lives.

Still, these are matters which any moderately thoughtful person is not unable to see in their true light. But telegraphy, with which Mr. Williams' work deals, demands faculties of an exceptionally high order. Presence of mind, promptitude in action, may at any moment be indispensable. And, if in Europe, how much more in India, for the use of the telegraphic service in which country this work is chiefly compiled, and in which so many natural causes habitually bring about a "solution of continuity" in the communication? We are, indeed, disposed to regard the remarks on this head (pp. 319-334) as among the most valuable in the book, which, though compiled under the orders of the Indian Director-General of Telegraphs, will be of the greatest practical value to telegraphists, wheresoever employed.

* "Mem Sahib; or, Should she have told him." By Mrs. Frank T. Platts. Hamilton, Adams and Co. 1885.

† "Manual of Telegraphy." By W. Williams, Superintendent of Indian Government Telegraphs. Illustrated by Wood Engravings. Longmans. 1885.

It is not a little singular, and far from creditable to the common sense or liberality of the Government of India, that this particular Service should be the subject of what may fairly be called the most "scurvy" treatment. Covenants, on the strength of which men, who had only failed by a few marks in the notoriously stiff competition for the Indian Civil Service, had "gone in for" the Telegraphic branch, seem to us to have been set aside with a cynical disregard of common fairness which cannot be too severely reprobated. And, when the enormous importance which the Telegraph Department will, in the impending war, attain, is borne in mind, it will be recognised how unwise an "economy" it is to leave it, for the sake of saving a few hundred rupees, in a state of justifiable, and something more than "sub-acute," discontent.

THE PURPOSE OF THEOSOPHY.*

What is Theosophy? Mrs. Sinnett's pamphlet explains, but whether clearly is open to question. Perhaps, however, such an "occultism" is by the very nature of things inexplicable. "One of the first truths for a student to realise is that of reincarnation, or spirit-evolution," but the dictum needs translating, so it is added: "Nature having, by a long course of evolution through the many and various forms of the inferior kingdoms, developed the humanity of which we now have cognisance, proceeds from this point onward with an infinite hope of spiritual and psychical advancement which is now only beginning to be dimly perceived as possible, but which, in the course of time, will become an accepted fact."

But the development must be upwards; man cannot degenerate into a monkey, though it is the privilege of the monkey to rise to the dignity of a man. The logical inference which irresistibly rises on learning this theory is that Providence has been kinder to the monkey than the man.

The next axiom which must be accepted by the true Theosophite is that every human being has a "karma," which latter is "the law of cause and effect operating through the merit and demerit of a person's deeds in each life." How does Mrs. Sinnett apply this theory? She herself shall explain: "When we see people afflicted by congenital ailments it may be safely assumed that these ailments are the inevitable results of causes started by themselves in a previous birth." It seems rather hard that one should be born blind because, in bygone ages, one's "ancestral monkey" committed some pranks unbecoming his race. "Incarnations" are dangerous alike with regard to the past as the future, and it would not be difficult to prove the fallacy of the theory, but Mrs. Sinnett's object is not to convince, but to explain.

Allusion has been made to "physical advancement." What is it? Mrs. Sinnett proclaims that there is an "excessively attenuated fluid or medium" (termed "akara") "which encompasses this world, pervades the universe, and surrounds everything in life, receives and records all our thoughts for a longer or shorter period, according to the intensity and precision with which they are conceived." She contends that to some persons it is given by Nature to be able to interpret the impressions which are implanted in this subtle medium, while to others the privilege is attainable only by a long course of abstraction and thought. Then "within this atmosphere may be read the events of his past life, as also those which will happen in the future." This is a somewhat startling assertion, and a sceptic as to the truths of Theosophy might be tempted to test Mrs. Sinnett's dogma by the very practical mode of bidding her tell the price of Consols a year hence; if she does possess the power claimed it may safely be predicted that her religion will not long be wanting in the sinews of war; nay, more, high station and exalted position are in store for its votaries, for it would become a necessity for Government to keep its "occult seer," who could name any terms reasonable or unreasonable. Fancy of late months if Mrs. Sinnett had only revealed that war with Russia was impossible—this is, however, a political question, and beyond the scope of a religious enthusiast. Again the sceptic steps in and proclaims with honest fervour, "God protect us from a Theosophic seer; better far he had remained the ancestral monkey."

Theosophy does not necessitate on the part of its votaries, so we are taught to believe, any particular form of belief. This is true in more senses than one; for once its theories are accepted, and the next step is a formal secession to Buddhism. The Lama of Thibet is the high priest of Theosophy. What pranks Mrs. Sinnett's "ancestral monkey" must have committed to have led his descendant to weave together such a skein of absurd dogmas and crude theories, and proclaim that the new creed is to "regenerate the world." The only advantage of such a faith—unless one can exercise the powers which are supposed to belong to the elect of mankind—is to render a visit to the Zoological Gardens more enjoyable than would be the case were the chattering apes something less than "ancestral monkeys" for the ages yet unborn.

LAISSEZ-FAIRE, AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.

An old proverb says, "Let everything gang its own gait." The Italian tells us, "Che sarà sarà": what is to be will be; the German "Lass sein": let it take its own course. Oriental proverbs to the same effect are so numerous, and in such various dialects, that we hope our readers will excuse us if we do not ask our printers to "set them up." The idea is universal, "Quod semper, quod ubique, quod et omnibus." What every one, in all times, and in all places, has asserted, must be true. We venture to disagree. The fact is, that it is convenient for "humans," as for ostriches, to bury their heads in the sand, and of set purpose to see nothing. One can always find heads of families who will let everything go by the board rather than open their eyes to the true state of their affairs, and bestir themselves. Not to speak of the heads of States, whose eyes are, as a rule, so unwilling to look facts in the face as fully to justify Oxenstierna's well-known, though probably apocryphal, saying.

Universal, however, and well-accredited, as may be this plan of letting things slide, it does not, somehow or other, seem to answer. Governments and individuals go on for a while peaceably enough in blissful ignorance of what is happening. But suddenly they are touched in a sensitive part, and wonder what they can have been about. And then they blame anyone but themselves. Satan reckoned on this, when he said to his Maker, "Touch Job, and he will curse Thee!" (Job did not, but his wife wanted him to.) Yet Job was a model of patience, and was nowise to blame for what had happened, as if the case with people, or peoples, who neglect their own interests.

Every general principle demands an application. And to no country, assuredly, can the principle that laissez-faire is, of all things, to be avoided, be more especially applicable than to our own, whose interests exist all over the world, in many places, too, where not to advance, in the face of the rapid forward progress of other nations, is to recede.

Now, the more pockets you have, the more receptacles are there for thieves' hands; the more houses you may possess, the more numerous are the "places where the robber may break in;" the larger your property, the greater the thief's temptation.

Quanto mayor es la fortuna, tanto es menor segura (the greater that your fortune be, the less is its security), says the old Spanish proverb, as old, perhaps, as the days of the Cid. How has the British nation protected its pockets?

It is, perhaps, not wholly inopportune to consider where the "policy," if so it can be called, of waiting on events, has landed us.

We have been within appreciable distance of a war with Russia. Why? Because those who were, unfortunately, in power, obstinately refused to recognise facts, and to perceive that the advances of the Tsar's troops were deliberate, and required checking with something more definite than appeals to the empty promises previously made by a perfidious Government. The result was inevitable, and had been foreseen by every competent person who has put pen to paper on the subject—a collision between the invaders and the invaded, which left us no alternative but to interfere—a scare, the arming of troops and ships in a most undignified hurry (as though ostentatiously to show how utterly unprepared we were), vast expense incurred, the Indian Army hurriedly increased, and the Indian Empire saddled with a future annual outlay of two millions sterling. And all solely attributable to laissez-faire.

For many months we have not had an Ambassador, even at a Court so prone to intrigue as Constantinople, and the insult lately offered to our representative in Spain (assuredly not without deliberate intent) shows the estimation in which a do-nothing policy throughout Europe has allowed us to be held in even that comparatively insignificant country.

We turn with reluctance to the sad spectacle presented to our view at Khartoum; as flagrant an instance of wilful blindness to events as has ever been furnished in the history of any nation. Here again we find laissez-faire at work; the typical hero deliberately abandoned, until too late, by the very Cabinet which had sent him out to overcome difficulties all but insuperable, an enormous expenditure incurred in vain, as noble a man as ever lived lost without the slightest beneficial result being achieved, and our own faces blackened in the eyes of every inhabitant of Egypt.

We might adduce instances without number of the same kind. In Kashmir, in Nepal, on the Northern and the Eastern as well as on the North-Western frontier of India, an intelligent foresight, coupled, when needful, with intelligent activity, would have placed us in a very different, and far more tenable, position with nearly every frontier State. One prominent instance is at this moment in every Anglo-Indian's mouth. We refer, of course, to what is going on in Burma. To many this will appear almost a bolt from a clear sky. But those who have followed Burmese affairs with attention, and common sense, have seen, that we ought long since to have looked out for squalls, as the sailors say, in that quarter. The penchant of the Burmese for any European nation rather than ourselves is no new thing. If they want to employ any European in a place of trust, it has for years been pretty certain that he will be some continental adventurer whose character does not show a very clean bill of health, and into whose antecedents it is as well not too closely to inquire. Such was the so-called "General" Orgoni, and more than we need name.

By these it doubtless was that the Burmese were encouraged to lean on other nations, and to make them, as far as they could, a counterpoise to ourselves. Successive Chief Commissioners are known to have warned the Government of what was going on. We have, whether from incredulity, indolence, or inability to understand what it was that was going on before their eyes, far too long shut our eyes to the great danger of French intrigues from the Tonquin side. Our geographical position, commanding as we do the Irrawaddy, the natural outlet of Burma, would, if properly utilised, have secured for us a preponderating influence, and it is only by unaccountable neglect that a weak and detested king like Theebaw has been permitted so long to flout us with impunity. How entirely the whole position of affairs is altered by the direct intervention of a meddling and intriguing European of the first class will be apparent to all. Influence in Burma can hardly ever again be, as it ought to have been, a peculium of England. Nor will even an annexation, which may involve negotiations with France, be altogether a simple matter. Yet annexation has, to many, been the panacea for all Burmese trouble.

Time alone and more precise information—which we have no accredited Agent on the spot to procure for us—of what is actually in progress, can show what it is at present vain to forecast. Mischief is afoot, and, as we have often urged, the first duty of our Government, at home and in India, is to have full, independent, and reliable information concerning its exact nature and probable results.

We learn with great pleasure that it is proposed to hold a meeting at the Mansion House on the 20th inst., to advocate the objects which it is proposed, by Lady Dufferin's Fund, to attain. We are confident that the meeting will be numerous and influentially attended, and will, both directly and also indirectly, by calling public attention to the subject, result in a substantial addition to the sums at Lady Dufferin's disposal for the benefit of Indian women.

OBITUARY.

LORD SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

The death of Lord Shaftesbury, which took place at Folkestone on Thursday last, will be universally regretted, though, taking place in the fulness of years (he was born in 1801), its occurrence could not, in the nature of things, have been long deferred.

"Lord Shaftesbury was, as the Times reminds us, educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he obtained a first class in classics in 1822, graduated M.A. in 1832, and was created D.C.L. in 1841. As Lord Ashley, he was first returned to Parliament as member for Woodstock in 1826. All through his political career he assumed an attitude of independence, and, although he had a brief experience of official life, he had no desire for office, the details of which were somewhat irksome for him. On entering the House he gave a general but not a constant support to the Governments of Liverpool and Canning. His first considerable speech was delivered in 1828, in connection with the proposed provision for Canning's family, which he cordially supported. When the Duke of Wellington came into power, Lord Ashley accepted office as one of the Commissioners of the Board of Control. He was returned for Dorchester in 1830, and for Dorsetshire in 1831, which county he represented for 15 years. He was returned for Bath in 1847, and sat for that borough until the year 1851, when he succeeded his father in the peerage. Lord Ashley had a second brief experience of office in 1834-5, when he was a Lord of the Admiralty in Sir Robert Peel's Administration. Peel again offered him a post in the Government in 1841, but Lord Ashley declined the offer on finding that the Premier's views would not allow him to support the Ten Hours Bill."

He took an interest in all philanthropic schemes tending to the benefit of the people of India, and their promoters never failed to receive from him active aid, sympathy, and advice. His best known Parliamentary utterance on Indian affairs took place when Lord Ellenborough was in Lord Derby's first Administration, the identical of the then Board of Control.

"The Governor-General of India having issued a severe proclamation in Oude, Lord Ellenborough, the Minister for India, sent unknown to his colleagues, a despatch severely censuring this proclamation. The despatch became public, and led to his resignation, and very nearly to the defeat of the Ministry, a vote of censure being moved in both Houses of Parliament, but not carried. Lord Shaftesbury moved the vote of censure on the Government in the Lords, taking the view that Lord Ellenborough's condemnation of the Governor-General was calculated to weaken the authority of the latter and to encourage them then in arms against the British power. A very exciting debate followed upon this motion, which was only lost by nine votes."

In an article on his death the same journal makes the following feeling remarks:—In Lord Shaftesbury there has passed away the most eminent social reformer of the present century. It is not too much to say that he had acquired world-wide fame as a philanthropist, and that his name is inextricably interwoven with many of the most humane movements of two generations. Pre-eminently the friend of the poor, the degraded, and the outcast, his generous sympathies and his ceaseless efforts on behalf of the classes in whom he took so deep an interest have given him a high place in the illustrious roll of benevolent Englishmen. Whatever errors of judgment he may have committed during his long career, these are forgotten in the universal sentiment of regret which the announcement of his death will awaken. It is interesting, and perhaps not a little singular, to note, that one of the most steadfast and powerful friends which the humbler classes have ever had, as well as one of the most trusted, did not belong to their own order of the commonalty, but to the privileged order of the aristocracy.

It is probable that he will be interred in Westminster Abbey. That fane could not receive a more worthy occupant than one whose undoubted abilities, and rare tenacity of purpose, were habitually devoted to the welfare of his kind, and not of his kind alone.

MR. LOISETTE is teaching by letter—he being in London, his pupils in India. But what is he teaching? Something dreadful, for students must not even tell their wives. Oh, for a "secret commission!"

AMONGST the many quaint customs in India must be enumerated the 'Cocoanut Festival,' on which occasion Hindus and their families, all dressed in their gayest and smartest costumes, betake themselves to the sea-beach, and then, with offerings of cocoanuts and flowers, appease the deity who takes the sea under his special charge. It is a gay and merry sight, much akin in its leading features to the old-fashioned fairs prevalent in this country in the times of our ancestors.
